Arliss Alone Beats Par in Los Angeles

Los Angeles, March 27.—"The Man Who Played God" was the only attraction to rise above the average level with its gross of $16,000 representing an overage of two grand. Despite a $5 opening, "The Wet Parade" failed by $500 to hit par, getting $15,500 on the week. That was good, considering the terrific licking taken by other houses.

Estimated takings for the week ending March 23:

"THE WET PARADE" (M-G-M)
GRAUMAN'S CHINESE—(2,500), 50c-$1.50, 7 days, $5 premiere. Sid Grauman stage show. Gross: $15,500. (Average, $16,000.)

"SHE WANTED A MILLIONAIRE" (Fox)
LOEW'S STATE—(2,416), 35c-65c, 7 days. Stage play, "Sons o' Guns." Gross: $19,000. (Average, $27,000.)

"LADY WITH A PAST" (RKO Pathe)
ORPHEUM—(2,750), 35c-65c, 7 days, 2nd week. Duke Ellington and orchestra. Gross: $11,500. (Average, $16,000.)

"FORBIDDEN" (Col.)
PANTAGES HOLLYWOOD—(3,000), 35c-65c, 7 days. Stage show. Gross: $10,000. (Average, $15,000.)

"THE WISER SEX" (Para.)
PARAMOUNT—(3,596), 35c-65c, 7 days. Stage show. Gross: $14,000. (Average, $25,000.)

"NICE WOMEN" (Univ.)

"THE HEART OF NEW YORK" (Warners)
WARNER BROS. HOLLYWOOD—(3,000), 35c-50c, 7 days. Stage show Gross: $15,000. (Average, $14,000.)

"THE MAN WHO PLAYED GOD" (Warners)
WARNER BROS. DOWNTOWN—(2,400), 35c-50c, 7 days. Vaudeville. Gross: $16,000. (Average, $14,000.)

"PLAY GIRL" (F. N.)
WARNER BROS. WESTERN—(2,400), 50c-75c, 7 days. Gross: $7,000. (Average, $15,000.)

"THE GREEKS HAD A WORD FOR THEM" (U. A.)
UNITED ARTISTS—(2,100), 35c-65c, 4th week, 5 days. Gross: $6,600. (Average, $13,500.)

Tough on B.O. In Providence

Providence, March 27.—The usual Holy Week slump sent grosses skidding to the bottom this week, all houses taking it on the button. Loew's with "The Passionate Plumber" went down to $8,500, although everybody thought the picture was swell and dailies played up Jimmy Durante's schnozzle in a special cartoon strip.

The combination houses, Albee and Fays, also found tough sledding, being off around $2,000 from their usual intake.

Estimated takings for the week ending March 24:

"THE IMPATIENT MAIDEN" (Univ.)
RKO ALBEE—(2,300), 15c-75c, 7 days. Gross: $8,000. (Average, $10,000.)

"THE WISER SEX" (Para.)
MAJESTIC—(2,300), 15c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $6,300. (Average, $10,000.)

"THE PASSIONATE PLUMBER" (M-G-M)
LOEW'S STATE—(3,800), 15c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $8,500. (Average, $16,000.)

"HELL'S HOUSE" (Ziedmun)
PARAMOUNT—(2,300), 15c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $5,000. (Average, $6,000.)

"DISCARDED LOVERS" (Action) and "LAW AND ORDER" (Univ.)
RKO VICTORY—(1,600), 10c-35c, 7 days. Gross: $2,000. (Average, $3,000.)

"POLICE COURT" (Monogram)
FAYS—(1,600), 15c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $5,200. (Average, $8,000.)

'Fireman' Breaks Record in Frisco with $9,000 Overage

San Francisco, March 27.—Bugaboo of Holy Week failed to stop Joe E. Brown at the Warner and he hung up an all-time record for the house at $19,000 on "Fireman, Save My Child." At the Orpheum, Thurston, the magician, was held over and helped "The Silent Witness" to chalk up $15,000, which is big business for that house.

Estimated takings for the week ending March 22:

"AFTER TOMORROW" (Fox)
FOX—(4,600), 35c-60c, 7 days. Stage revue. Gross: $32,000. (Average, $32,000.)

Week ending March 23:

"EMMA" (M-G-M)
EL CAPITAN—(3,100), 25c-40c-60c, 7 days. Stage revue. Gross: $15,500. (Average, $13,000.)

"SILENT WITNESS" (Fox)
ORPHEUM—(3,000), 35c-60c, 7 days. Thurston, magician, in person. Gross: $15,000. (Average, $9,000.)

"SKY DEVILS" (U. A.)
UNITED ARTISTS—(1,200), 25c-40c-60c, 2nd week, 7 days. Gross: $7,000. (Average, $10,000.)

"GAY CABALLERO" (Fox)
WARFIELD—(2,700), 35c-60c, 7 days. Stage revue. Gross: $20,000. (Average, $20,000.)

Week ending March 24:

"CARNIVAL BOAT" (RKO Pathe)
GOLDEN GATE—(2,800), 25c-40c-60c, 7 days. Vaudeville. Gross: $12,500. (Average, $13,000.)

"FIREMAN, SAVE MY CHILD" (Warners)
WARNER—(1,385), 35c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $19,000. (Average, $10,000.)

Week ending March 25:

"THE FLUTE CONCERT OF SANS SOUCI" (German)
FILMARTE—(1,400), 35c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $2,750. (Average, $2,500.)

"STRANGERS IN LOVE" (Para.)
PARAMOUNT—(2,670), 25c-35c-60c, 7 days. Gross: $13,500. (Average, $13,000.)

Snow Storms Hit Buffalo First Runs

Buffalo, March 27.—Holy Week records might have been set, but for a severe snow and ice storm accompanied by a temperature drop. At that exhibitors were better satisfied than heretofore.

Estimated takings for the week ending March 25:

"UNION DEPOT" (F. N.)
BUFFALO—(3,500), 30c-65c, 7 days. Lilyan Tashman on stage Gross: $23,000. (Average, $25,000.)

"MURDERS IN THE RUE MORGUE" (Univ.)
CENTURY—(3,000), 25c-35c, 7 days. Gross: $7,000. (Average, $7,500.)

"BEN-HUR" (M-G-M)
COURT STREET—(1,800), 25c, 3 days. Gross: $1,600. (Average for week, $4,500.)

"BUSINESS AND PLEASURE" (Fox)
GREAT LAKES—(3,000), 25c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $14,500. (Average, $17,500.)

"THE WISER SEX" (Para.)
HIPPODROME—(2,100), 25c-50c, 7 days Vaudeville. Gross: $14,000. (Average, $15,000.)

"THE MONSTER WALKS" (First Div.)
LAFAYETTE—(3,300), 25c, 7 days. Gross: $9,000. (Average, $8,500.)

"Dancers" and "Doctor" Tied In Saint Paul

St. Paul, March 27.—"Dancers in the Dark" and "Alias the Doctor" licked par to the tune of one grand each, while the other first run spots just reached average.

Estimated takings for the week ending March 25:

"ALIAS THE DOCTOR" (F. N.)
PARAMOUNT—(2,300), 25c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $8,000. (Average, $7,000.)

"DANCERS IN THE DARK" (Para.)
RIVIERA—(1,300), 25c-35c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $6,000. (Average, $5,000.)

"PRESTIGE" (RKO Pathe)
RKO ORPHEUM—(2,600), 25c-50c, 7 days. Vaude. Gross: $12,000. (Average, $12,000.)

"THE STRUGGLE" (U. A.)
SHUBERT—(1,500), 15c-25c-40c, 7 days. Gross: $2,500. (Average, $2,500.)

"BEAST OF THE CITY" (M-G-M)
TOWER—(1,000), 15c-25c, 7 days. Gross: $2,000. (Average, $2,000.)

"Play Girl" Best Bet in Indianapolis

Indianapolis, March 27.—"Play Girl" was the only picture which topped par last week, getting $4,500 at the Apollo, which was $500 better than average. Other houses slumped due to Holy Week.

Estimated takings for the week ending March 25:

"PLAY GIRL" (Warners)
APOLLO—(1,100), 25c-50c, 7 days. Gross: $4,500. (Average, $4,000.)

Balto. Groans As All Houses Take Big Dip

Baltimore, March 27.—Theatres here were socked terrifically during Holy Week, Loew's Stanley and the continued run engagement at the Parkway, the only ones running anywhere near normal. At the former "Polly of the Circus" was advertised heavily in advance and hit just the average, while "Broken Lullaby" did $400 above normal on its continued run at Loew's Parkway.

Estimated takings for the week ending March 24:

"THE WISER SEX" (Para.)

NEWSREELS AND THE POLL

IT is more than passing strange that the extensive questionnaire of the "Motion Picture National Preference Poll" now in the process of submission to selected lists intended, it is said, to ultimately reach some twelve millions of persons, makes no reference to and asks no expression on the newsreel.

The newsreel is admittedly the one expression of the screen least subject to or vulnerable to the attack of the foes of the screen, and it is admittedly the one screen product more generally accepted with appreciation and enthusiasm by the more intelligent minorities of the box office patronage, losing, the while, none of its mass appeal.

Despite the fact that the newsreel is ignored by the Preference Poll it is in truth the newsreel which is in the minds of the spokesmen of the industry when they orate upon the "power of the screen" and variously seek to imply for it the virtues with which the press is endowed in public opinion. True enough the newsreel seldom indeed exerts any such power. Not once in a blue moon does a newsreel ever take a healthy editorial wallop at anything or anybody. But it could.

A poll which goes into the minute classifications of drama and lists scenics and animated cartoons, can ill-afford to ignore the screen form which is in fact the parent of the art and the pioneer of most of its technique. Further the newsreel is, save for the occasional exploration picture, practically the only fact, or non-fiction, expression of the screen.

The newsreel is, in this instance, once again the victim of the unappreciation with which it has been accursed ever since the coming of the feature era, continuing to be bought by the exhibitor as a mere filler, a program item on the volume basis of the old General Film "program," and dealt with by salesmen as a little white trading chip for one of the chinks in the deal. The whole situation is poisonously reflected in the fact that the difference in the selling price of a bad feature and a good feature may be two million dollars, but the difference in the sales reaction to the best newsreel as opposed to the weakest newsreel is not a five cent piece, on national ratios.

Once upon a time Mr. Will Hays was fond of the phrase, "No one is for the screen but the people." Apparently no one likes the newsreel but the public.

FACTS ONLY

THE career of the late Jeremiah Joseph Kennedy, extensively surveyed in last week's MOTION PICTURE HERALD, is unique in the annals of the screen in the completeness of the execution of a plan, program and campaign, extending over a measured period of years for the attainment of a calculated success.

Mr. Kennedy was the first, and stands yet one of the few, to operate with precision on precise information, and with a total disregard of "hunches" and of the Know-it-alls of the status quo which he invaded. It was conspicuously an aspect of his work that in the main he went afield for his lieutenants and brought into the industry a type of personnel, which it had not evolved. He brought electrical engineers to give the studios lights and lighting of which it had never heard. He changed film "manufacturing" plants into "laboratories" to attract employes above the factory hand type. He introduced accountants and statisticians from the best Wall street establishements before Wall street knew there was a motion picture. He made a motion picture contract a contract and not the mere beginning of negotiations.

Also unique among important operators of his day in the industry he knew where his period began and ended, took his profits and quit when he was through. Most of his contemporaries stayed on past their time and were washed clean by the tides of progress on the same beach where they had struck gold a few years before.

SYMPATHY

ONE may perhaps be forgiven for a considerable mingling of emotions on reading the Associated Press dispatch announcing that Dr. George W. Calver, attending Capitol physician, alarmed by "the spectacle of many exhausted members of the hard working House," has issued a warning "to slow down to avoid danger." Considering some of the activities by which some members of the House have been overworking themselves about the motion picture, it might be better to have them stop completely.

THE TIME TO SELL

IF one may assume that anyone who will chew gum will go to the pictures, and one may, then the advertising performance of the William Wrigley, Jr., Company, reported in the Wall Street Journal, becomes important, especially in view of the fact that the sales involved top those of last year. The Journal points out that "enlarged sales so far this year have been effected by increased advertising. Wrigley is taking advantage of the fact that fewer manufacturers are competing for the public's attention."

CONTACT

THE color of something of an explanation of why the motion picture exhibitor across this broad land of ours is troubled with some aspects of his screen ware is presented, all unintentionally, in an interview with Mr. Ernst Lubitsch, in which, discussing "sex" and the pictures, he says: "The fine feelings of the old films do not count for much now. . . . The future of the films will not be any different from the future of the world. The change in life in Manhattan will be reflected in the films from Hollywood. It is a great place, New York. I had a good time here—a party every night." Mr. Lubitsch's audience, however, does not go to a Manhattan party every night.

UNIT AND INDEPENDENT PRODUCTION TO BOLSTER SCHEDULES OF MAJORS

Most Favorable Opportunities in Many Years Presented to Independent Producers Under Larger Companies' Plans

Theatre owners of the country need have no worry over a product shortage next season, as had been threatened recently because of the new economic order in Hollywood whereby studio costs and filming charges were ordered reduced.

Tentative production schedules thus far drafted by the larger companies indicate that they will offer as many pictures during 1932-33 as were available this season. Numerically, major studios will produce fewer pictures, but, owing to new operating policies to be adopted by several companies calling for unit production and the distribution of independent product, the distribution total will equal, if not exceed, that of the current season.

Comeback for Independents

Under the new operating policies already decided on by three large producer-distributors, unit production assumes new importance in the industry and independent studios are expected to realize the most favorable opportunities for distribution by the large companies that have been afforded them in many years. Both dictating and explaining these innovations in operating policies are: reduced production budgets being sought by all studios and a new insistence on product of higher quality.

Numerically smaller production schedules are incidental to reduced budgets being decided on for next season's product. Distribution totals, therefore, will be augmented by acceptance of independently made product of good quality in order to utilize to the fullest the normal facilities of large distributing organizations. Production quality, it is believed, will be improved by the concentration of studio talent on fewer pictures, which will be made possible not only by reduced schedules, but also by the new place of unit production in the studio scheme.

More Independent Activity

West Coast opinion already indicates that the 1932-33 season will witness more independent production activity than for many years past, and that the total of independent product to be made will compare favorably—numerically, at least—with that of the larger producers. Studio facilities, too, appear to be ample to accommodate increased independent activity. In addition to such large studios as Metropolitan, Tec-Art, Universal and others which have been the scene of much independent production, the old Pathe plant at Culver City is now available, and the old Fox Western Avenue plant at Hollywood likewise has been untenanted since Fox activities were concentrated at Westwood Hills.

Tentative production plans indicate that nine large companies will distribute 385 pictures during 1932-33, as compared with the 377 pictures on the current season's distribution lists of 10 companies. Of the 385 pictures, a minimum of 33 will be turned out either by production units or independent companies.

Unit Films for Radio

Unit production will assume its greatest significance in the distribution plans of RKO Radio Pictures. Tentative plans of this company call for distribution of a minimum of approximately 60 pictures, 46 of which will be made by the company. In addition, four or more production units will make 11 to 15 additional pictures, and this number may be increased later on. During the current season, Radio is distributing 45 of the 57 pictures originally announced on the combined Radio and Pathe schedules.

Unit production will also be an important phase of the distribution activities of Paramount Publix next season. Charles R. Rogers will produce eight pictures for Paramount distribution and there is a strong likelihood that other independent or unit productions will be added to the new Paramount schedule, which probably will aggregate 55 to 60 pictures. Paramount announced 71 for the current season, but subsequent eliminations already have reduced this number to 60.

Big Producers Will Make Fewer Pictures, but Acceptance of Independent Films Is Expected to Increase Distribution Totals

Units producing for Paramount will be independently financed, while those producducing for RKO Radio will be financed by a holding company organized for the purpose, if the recommendation of Harold B. Franklin, executive advisor to President Hiram S. Brown, is followed.

Columbia Maintaining Schedule

Columbia is preparing its new schedule at the present time, and, according to Charles Rosenzweig, general sales manager, there is little likelihood that the current season's schedule of 26 features and 16 Westerns will be reduced. Jack Cohn, vice-president, already has announced that the company will make at least one Wheeler and Woolsey feature comedy and will be in the market for good independent product for distribution during 1932-33.

Tiffany has indicated that it will duplicate its current season's schedule of 12 features and 12 Westerns next season. Universal's current list of 26 will be matched next season, Carl Laemmle, Jr., announced while in New York recently. Present indications are that there will be no reduction next season in the schedule of 48 customarily made by Fox. There is a probability, too, that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer next season will exceed its usual schedule of 48, as it will do during the current season. Metro will distribute a total of 53 pictures this season, and a minimum of 50 is indicated for next season, according to Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity, who returned recently from Coast conferences on new product. Felix Feist, general sales manager, said the new schedule was "undecided" still.

May Be Slight Warner-FN Drop

Warner-First National may make a slight reduction in numerical totals next season, as compared with the current schedule of 70 pictures. Present indications are that only 64 of the announced 70 will be made, and that next season's schedule will total about 60 pictures. J. L. Warner, however, said while here recently that the 1932-33 program had not been definitely discussed up to that time.

Conferences on United Artists distribution plans for the coming season were concluded on the Coast this week, but a formal announcement of their outcome awaited the return of company executives to New York. Home office opinion inclined to the belief that there would be no reduction next season in the schedule of 15 now being worked out.

No change in Educational's distribution plans for the 1932-33 season is seen by E. W. Hammons, who indicated that the company would match this season's schedule of 52 two-reel subjects and 75 single-reel subjects, in addition to its distribution of Tiffany and Sono-Art World Wide feature product.

TAX ON ADMISSION OVER 45 CENTS IN NEW PROPOSALS BEFORE HOUSE

Committee Estimates Raising of 40 Millions by Latest Plan; Industry Unscathed by Defeat of General Sales Assessment

By F. L. BURT, Washington

Theatre admissions exceeding 45 cents would be subject to taxation under new proposals submitted to the House by the ways and means committee on Tuesday. The proposed levy would raise $40,000,000, according to the committee's estimates.

New taxes, together with those already in the bill, would raise a total of $1,290,000,000. This is about fifty millions more than contemplated in the original bill, a number of taxes having been included apparently as a safeguard should the House reject some of the proposals. With the new program before it, indications are that the House will make better speed in disposing of the measure, possibly sending it to the Senate by the end of this week or the beginning of the next.

Opposition to the sales tax, as expressed during the debate which culminated in its defeat March 24, was widespread among varied interests. It included the antagonism of the East to the proposed tax on imported fuel oil and gasoline; a trade between the Western seekers of the oil tax whereby they were to obtain support for their proposal in return for votes against the sales tax; the opposition of manufacturers generally to the whole principle of the sales tax, and the fight of the Progressive group in the House against any tax which would be burdensome upon the workingmen, as it was contended the sales tax would be. Amid scenes which recalled those of war days, a turbulent House "kicked out" the sales tax by a vote of 223 to 153.

Series of Delays

Possibilities that the revenue bill may not be enacted into law for several months now are seen in the delays the measure has so far encountered in the House. Preparation of the legislation was undertaken early in January, and hearings were held on the measure during the latter part of that month, but it was not until March 7 that the bill was in shape to be reported. After passing the House, the measure will go to the Senate, where, again, hearings will be held which probably will not be concluded until well toward the end of April. The bill must then run the gauntlet of the Senate and, after passage there, must go to a conference committee, where any differences between the two Houses will be ironed out.

Even the most optimistic observers do not believe the measure can be finally enacted until very near the end of May, at the earliest, and, if anything occurs further to delay the bill, it will go over until the early fall, for Congress will adjourn or recess about June 10 in order to clear the way for the two national conventions at Chicago, the first of which will begin June 14.

That Congress will not adjourn from June to December but will recess, probably until September, now appears likely, as the legislative "jam" begins to make itself felt. Consideration of appropriation bills for the Government departments has been postponed by the Senate until after it has had a chance to read the House tax bill and determine the extent to which economy must be practiced, and this, in turn, has blocked the disposal of other matters which must be finally decided before Congress can adjourn.

If the tax bill is not passed so as to permit the imposition of the excise taxes by July 1, the attempt to balance the budget by June 30, 1933, is threatened with failure, since the revenues estimated from the measure are predicated upon having these taxes in force throughout the entire fiscal year.

French Amusement Industry Cancels Threatened Strike

The general theatre strike, planned in Paris as a protest against war in general and high taxes in particular, and scheduled to begin on Tuesday, was called off.

Premier Tardieu of France saved the situation with a promise to arrange at least a partial reduction in tax levies. The French amusement industry, therefore, cancelled the strike order.

Tiffany Ordered By Court to Drop Name; Will Appeal

Tiffany Productions, Inc., is instructed to refrain from using that name in a permanent injunction issued by Supreme Court Justice Edward Dore at New York, this week. The injunction, sought by Tiffany & Co., old established New York jewelry firm, has been the subject of a lengthy legal contest in New York courts. The picture company will appeal the decision, meanwhile retaining its use of the name, according to its attorney.

It was testified that the picture firm employed as a film trade-mark "a revolving, scintillating gem," and used such phrases as "Twenty Gems from Tiffany" and "Tiffany, It's a Gem," in its picture advertising, on which it has spent $1,013,003 since 1928.

Justice Dore held that there was "no colorable reason" for the use of such terms "except the desire to obtain the benefit of the reputation built up by the plaintiff at a great expense over a long period of years." Testimony revealed that the jewelry firm has spent $3,574,453.92 for advertising in New York alone in the past 23 years, and that some member of the Tiffany family has been connected with the firm since 1837.

Ford Announcement Also in Film Form

With 2,000 prints already on exhibition or en route to theatres, RCA Victor Company claims the fastest and largest job ever turned out for an industrial sound picture was gotten under way this week simultaneously with the published announcement introducing the new Ford eight-cylinder automobile. This subject, initially produced silently and with secrecy by Ford Motor Company, was rushed to the Metropolitan studio in Detroit last Saturday. There, under direction of Maurice Caplan, the picture was cut and edited and scored with a description of the new car by "Ty" Tyson, Michigan radio announcer, and then orders for prints were placed with Consolidated Film laboratories in New York.

Arrangements for distribution were made with Allied Theatres and a number of circuits and in addition to those prints, parts of the subject are claimed to have been released by newsreels. The picture was recorded by RCA Photophone.

Bob Savini Goes South

Bob Savini, special representative for Tiffany, arrived this week at Lexington, Ky., to launch a publicity and exploitation campaign in connection with the opening on Saturday of "Lena Rivers" at the Strand theatre, Lexington.

OTTERSON DISPLAYS ERPI SOUND IMPROVEMENT TO ELECTRICIANS

Company Will Soon Introduce a Wider Sound Range Which Is Expected to Establish a New Technique in Reproduction

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

At a New York luncheon gathering on Wednesday of some 900 executives of the electrical world belonging mainly to the Eastern consumers' gas-and-electric fraternity, John E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research Products, as honor guest and sole speaker, revealed the secret which Western Electric and ERPI have been carefully guarding—in true Bell System fashion—these past several months: certain improvements in the sound motion picture which executives of both corporations believe will bring the "perfect" sound film and with it a revolutionary change in the industry's recording and reproducing technique.

The occasion was the regular monthly meeting of the Electrical Association—formerly the New York Electrical Board of Trade, of which Clarence L. Law is president, and, following a few remarks by Mr. Law and by Frank W. Smith, who is president of the New York Edison Company, and of United Electric Light and Power, Mr. Otterson launched into a lengthy and well delivered discussion of "A Decade of Progress in the Recording and Reproducing of Sound."

Demonstrates Improvement

During his discussion, the president of ERPI demonstrated to the audience the improvement in sound from disc records as made in 1922 by acoustic recording, with records electrically recorded by orthoponic and exponential horn, as developed in 1925. Otterson then rounded out his demonstration with ERPI's heretofore closely concealed secret: a technical improvement which gives what sound experts call the widest range in sound reproduction ever made available since the sound film was first heard. The large meeting room in the Astor hotel rocked with vibration as a reproduced organ selection reached the deeper notes on the lower keyboard, just as a theatre responds to an organ.

Requires Reproducer Changes

Basically the improvement in ERPI's system, which was developed in the laboratories of the Bell interests in Bethune street, New York, is said by ERPI engineers to extend the band of frequencies which the theatre is capable of reproducing about 20 to 25 per cent higher and lower than at present. The change is more obvious to the ear than is the change which took place between the electrically recorded orthoponic record of 1925, over the "tinny," screech and "canned" noises which came from the talking machine of 1922. ERPI considers the new system as eclipsing its "noiseless recording" mechanism, announced last year.

Electrical Research Products is not yet ready to announce the details pertaining to the merchandising of its new mechanism. It will require certain changes in the reproducer and will necessitate the correction of the acoustical arrangements of most theatres. This, however, depends upon the individual situation. The changes will be made on a "custom-made" basis, and will end Western Electric's attempt to completely standardize sound equipment. Each theatre will be treated individually, although it is not obligatory for an ERPI user to make use of the new system.

In addition to correction of the theatre acoustics, the entire reproducing system in each theatre must be "tuned-up" and "balanced." The new system will be made available to studios for recording, simultaneously with its release to theatres for reproducers.

Otterson's demonstration of the new wide range frequency reproducer was received with much interest by Will H. Hays, Adolph Zukor, Sidney R. Kent and R. H. Cochrane, who represented the industry at the Electrical Association's meeting. A comparative few in the industry have been aware of the development.

M G M Sales Policy Gets New Airing at Meeting on April 5

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's percentage sales policy will again become the subject of an industry roundtable discussion, April 5, when the continuing committee appointed by the National Protest Meeting of last fall confers with Felix Feist, MGM sales manager, in a one-day closed meeting in New York.

Exhibitor objections to Metro's percentage sales policy gave rise last fall to a national protest meeting held in New York, but opposition was withdrawn when Feist later assured the meeting's continuing committee that its 12 "specials" would be sold uniformly throughout the country at 25, 30 and 35 per cent, with weekend play dates. David Barrist, member of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, complained to the recent Washington convention of the MPTOA that this policy was not being adhered to and presented information which, he said, showed that Metro was reducing the percentage agreed on in certain individual cases. Reconvening was authorized.

Objections to Metro's demand for a Sunday playdate guarantee on "Emma" were raised by five Cleveland independent circuits which refused the picture, declaring that they would play it at the distributors' terms on any weekday playdate but not on Sunday. No objection, however, was voiced to the percentage figures asked for the picture. The recalcitrant circuits are: Washington Circuit, Associated Theatres, Community Circuit, Paul Gusdanovic Circuit and the Levine-Schwartz Circuit.

Producers Doing Good Job, Hays Survey Indicates

Producers are doing a good job of meeting the entertainment requirements of today's picture audiences, if the first returns from the audience preference poll being conducted by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America can be taken as an indication. Of several hundred replies to the association's questionnaire addressed to persons of prominence throughout the country no valid demands were made for any entertainment element not available already in pictures.

As was to be expected, the demand of most was for entertainment. A few asked for picture elements in the nature of propaganda, or for subjects of such limited audience appeal as to make them unprofitable production ventures. In all, little criticism and no new or valuable production ideas made their appearance in the first response of "fans."

The replies revealed that for the most part identical entertainment elements are involved in both popular and class appeal of pictures. In other words, the same features which please the many who are responsible for the estimate that the average mentality of picture audiences is 12 years, also please the "highbrows," and civic and socially prominent. The latter, however, having more diversified interests and crowded lives, do not attend motion picture performances often enough to alter the mentality of the average audience in the aggregate, according to one interpretation of the poll.

The response to the poll, in the opinion of the Hays office, reveals that new elements of attendance have been drawn to the theatres by today's pictures, but this opinion is not borne out in the preferences expressed by individuals who enumerate, for the most part, picture themes that have always been available in the theatre.

Action appears to be most in demand as an element of picture entertainment. Comedy, mystery and realism were other elements in popular demand. Inspirational and educational elements were preferred by a few.

Dreyfuss Not Art Director At Radio City, Says Roxy

S. L. Rothafel (Roxy) said yesterday that, contrary to printed reports, Henry Dreyfuss, because of other previous contracts which occupy his time, will not be associated as an art director with the theatres in Radio City in Rockefeller Center.

A new building in Rockefeller Center was announced Wednesday by Metropolitan Square Corporation, holding company for John D. Rockefeller. This building will be known as La Maison Francaise.

KAHANE TAKES CHARGE OF RKO's 1932-33 FILM PRODUCTION PLANS

Hiram Brown Silent on Report Move Is Permanent, With President Concentrating on Financial Administration

Executive guidance in the drafting of the RKO picture companies' 1932-33 production program will be in the hands of B. B. Kahane, vice-president and general counsel of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, who left for the company's Coast studios early this week to assume immediate supervision of picture activities and to be on hand for the drafting of new production schedules later. Kahane's appointment to indefinite supervision of the studios was announced earlier in the week by Hiram S. Brown, president of RKO, in the following manner:

"To enable me to give more time to other matters requiring my attention for the next several months, I have arranged for the company's vice-president, B. B. Kahane, temporarily to take over the supervision of the affairs and activities of RKO's picture companies."

B. B. KAHANE

Permanent Appointment Reported

Brown declined to comment on a report that in the future he would devote himself exclusively to administration of the company's financial affairs, after delegating phases of operating supervision to Kahane and Harold B. Franklin, who is executive advisor to Brown. Under such an arrangement, Kahane's supervision of picture activities would remain permanent, and Franklin would be appointed an executive vice-president of RKO with the authority of a general manager, if not actually so designated.

"My job," Brown said, "is president of RKO. That embraces all phases of the company's activities. For me to discuss for publication any of the internal activities and policies of the company in which I am engaged would be highly inappropriate."

Despite the description of Kahane's appointment as a "temporary" one, Brown indicated the possibilities of permanence in disclosing that a successor to Kahane's post as general counsel was being sought. He said that he was unable to verify reports that William Mallard, of the company's legal department, would be appointed to the position, adding that "no decision as to a successor had been made as yet."

Formal appointments of Kahane and Franklin are expected to be made at the next meeting of the RKO board of directors, no date for which has been set yet, according to Brown.

Independent Units First Move

Among the first concerns of Kahane on his arrival on the Coast, it is understood, will be the organization of independent producing units to operate under a new RKO financing subsidiary. A minimum of three or four such units will be organized to produce between 11 and 15 pictures for Radio-Pathe distribution. This plan is in accordance with an approved recommendation made by H. B. Franklin, and will boost the company's proposed distribution schedule from its own 45 pictures to an approximate 60.

Additional "efficiency" and economy recommendations by Franklin, also approved by the company, will result in the discontinuance of the RKO Theatre of the Air hour, the company's weekly radio broadcast; the RKO music department, and a corps of 24 girls which has been maintained as a program and theatre reviewing unit by the home office. The radio hour will be discontinued after April 8, but there is a possibility of its being resumed next fall, according to company executives who point out that the broadcast has been suspended for the summer season in prior years.

Drop Music Department April 15

Abandonment of the RKO music department, headed by Milton Schwartzwald, is scheduled for April 15. The circuit is understood to be negotiating for musical acts by Schwartzwald to play over RKO time. Abandonment of the three departments will result in reductions of expenditure of $300,000 annually, according to company estimates.

B. B. Kahane has been active in the theatre since 1919 when he came to New York from Chicago, where he was admitted to the bar in 1912, to assist in the organization of the Orpheum Circuit, Inc. He remained with that Western circuit as general counsel, secretary and treasurer and member of the board of directors, returning to Chicago when the executive offices were removed there in 1922.

With the consolidation of the interests of the Orpheum Circuit, Inc., with the Keith-Albee Company, he became secretary and director of the Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation with headquarters in the Palace Theatre building. Upon the formation of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation in November, 1928, Mr. Kahane was elected secretary and treasurer of the company, and a member of the board of directors, executive committee and finance committee, holding similar positions in the subsidiary companies. In March, 1929, Mr. Kahane was elected a vice-president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, and on September 14 of that year succeeded Maurice Goodman as general counsel.

Financial Plan for Fox New England

Under a new plan of readjustment of funded debt offered to stockholders of Fox New England Theatres, Inc., by Halsey, Stuart & Co., it is proposed that the holders of 6½ per cent convertible sinking fund gold debentures exchange their securities pro rata for the pledged first mortgage bonds, on the basis of $3,621,900 for $3,326,000 respectively. The pledged bonds so issued in exchange would be subject to an agreement deferring the sinking fund. The first mortgage bonds delivered will bear interest from Aug. 1, 1931.

For the year ended Oct. 25, 1931, the company reported a net amount of $750,660 available for interest, depreciation, amortization and federal taxes.

Slightly more than 65 per cent of the Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., 6½ per cent convertible notes due on May 1, and outstanding in the amount of $13,000,000, have been deposited to date with the Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company, New York depository, according to the noteholders' protective committee. The committee, headed by Ernest W. Niver, indicated that the percentage must be substantially increased if the committee's plan of reorganization is to be hastened.

Einfeld, Blumenstock Will Visit Five Key Situations

S. Charles Einfeld, in charge of advertising and publicity for Warner, leaves on Friday for Washington, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Milwaukee for conferences with local circuit advertising managers and branch managers.

Mort Blumenstock, recently named manager of advertising and exploitation of Warner theatres, will accompany Einfeld. It will be Blumenstock's first trip away from the home office since he assumed his new post.

RKO Adds Producer, Editor

Edward J. Montagne, producer, has been signed by David O. Selznick, in charge of production, as an associate producer at RKO Radio. Elizabeth North has been appointed story representative in London. She was formerly scenario editor for Basil Dean, at Associated Radio Pictures in England.

URBAN SHADOWS. A photographic symphony for those who go in for modern architectural rhythms. This is New York, today's Athens and Rome (not to mention Sodom and Gomorrah). But mostly it's New York, slightly rhapsodied here in a shot from the Fox Movietone one-reel special, "Manhattan Medley," which employed infra-D stock.

McCORMICK, TURNER NAMED TO RKO POSTS

Two Replace Daab and Orowitz, Respectively, Who Resigned; McCormick at Radio, Turner Has Theatres, Both Under Sisk

S. Barrett McCormick, most recently identified with the theatre advertising department of Lord & Thomas and Logan, advertising agency, and Terry Turner, formerly assistant to Hershel Stuart, publicity director of the Fox Poli circuit in New England, have stepped into the RKO posts of executive in charge of advertising and publicity of Radio Pictures, and a similar post in the RKO theatre circuit, respectively.

Their entrance into the company follows the resignation late last week of Hy Daab, for several years heading the Radio advertising department; and of Eli M. Orowitz, only recently named to the theatre position which Jack Hess left to join the Paramount organization. Reported differences with Robert F. Sisk, last week named to the newly created post of director of advertising and publicity for both the theatre and picture divisions of RKO, are understood to have been the reason for the resignations of Daab and Orowitz.

The Radio Pictures department, now presided over by McCormick, has been rearranged under a plan which provides for the origination of theatre advertising with McCormick's staff. Rutgers Nielson has been named general press representative, and John Moynihan, formerly handling trade paper material, shifts into the advertising division. The balance of the staff remains as formerly. Nielson will also handle trade paper contacts and publicity.

Both McCormick and Turner are directly responsible to Sisk under the arrangement.

Charles Washburn, formerly press representative for legitimate theatre and vaudeville organizations, has been added to the theatre division under Turner, following the decision of Richard Maney, also a "legitimate" press representative, not to accept the position. Washburn is exclusively to be in charge of the publicity for the Palace, RKO's ace vaudeville house in New York.

McCormick, born in Denver, received his early training in newspaper work, and from there moved into the theatrical business. He leaped into national prominence in theatre affairs during his tenure as manager of the Circle theatre in Indianapolis and the Allen in Cleveland. In addition to his work as manager, McCormick prepared the advertising, which made his name conspicuous. At that time also he inaugurated a distinct form of stage presentation which gained a respectable amount of attention.

McCormick next assumed the post of director of publicity and exploitation for Pathe Exchange, which position he held for four and one-half years. In the handling of Hal Roach and Mack Sennett comedies, he established the "circus night" idea in exhibition, based upon the showing of three or four two-reel comedies. He also prepared manuals containing exploitation ideas for the use of the exhibitors. He resigned from Pathe to become eastern representative for Douglas Fairbanks, after which he became associated with the theatrical department of Lord & Thomas and Logan. There, with Jack A. Pegler, McCormick aided in the preparation of newspaper campaigns for "Amos 'n' Andy," "Cimarron," and more recently "The Lost Squadron," among others.

Turner was born in Baltimore and also gained his early press experience in newspaper work in his native city. He inaugurated the publicity department of the Loew circuit, heading that department for 14 years, during which time he occasionally managed individual Loew houses. He gained a reputation for sensational theatre openings in the course of handling 42 such affairs for the circuit with de luxe theatres.

Three years ago, Turner resigned from Loew's to manage his own vaudeville acts with George Klein under the firm name of George Kelin-Terry Turner Attractions. Slightly more than one year ago Turner went to Europe in search of vaudeville material. On his return he associated himself with Hershel Stuart, publicity director of the Fox Poli circuit in New England.

Daab, some years ago, handled studio publicity for FBO, later coming to New York as director of advertising and publicity for the company. When FBO was purchased by RCA from Joseph P. Kennedy, and its name changed to RKO, Daab continued in the post.

Orowitz, for years identified with radio broadcasting exploitation in Philadelphia, came to New York some time ago and joined the RKO circuit in charge of vaudeville exploitation and advertising.

Camera Field Now Crowded: Schulberg

B. P. Schulberg, in charge of Paramount production on the Coast, has issued a warning to amateur photographers who envision highly lucrative positions as cameramen that the field is overcrowded in Hollywood. His statement is designed to check the rush of amateurs to the Coast.

Schulberg said: "The chances for an amateur motion picture photographer breaking into the big time in Hollywood are practically one in a million. At the present time there are more accredited cameramen in Hollywood than can be taken care of by current production plans of all the motion picture studios."

Sam Lefkowitz to Warner

Sam Lefkowitz, former booker for RKO theatres, has been named office manager of Warner-First National Metropolitan branches, with offices at the New York exchange.

Nat Levine, president of Mascot Pictures, has acquired the P. C. Hurst Company of Seattle, independent exchange. Pete Higgins, formerly with Metro, will manage.

American Newsreel First Release Now Is Set for August 1

First release of the proposed American Newsreel, originally scheduled for April 1, will not take place until August 1. Postponement is attributed by the company "to the large number of prospective theatre accounts which will not be available, because of existing contracts for established newsreels, until after that date."

Approximately 2,000 theatre accounts are in prospect for the August 1 starting date, it is said, as compared with 400 accounts which would be available as of April 1, according to Ross D. Whytock, editor of the new reel. This estimate contemplates closing of a deal now in progress for showing of the reel in Allies States Association theatres, the bulk of which are not now available also because of existing newsreel contracts.

Plans for production and distribution of a series of 26 novelty short subjects, to be known as the "Rambling Around Series," have been completed by American. A skeleton camera organization already established by the reel will be assigned subjects in connection with this series at once, Whytock said. The novelty series will be made with sound, although the newsreel issues will have only dialogue accompaniment, to be supplied by Lowell Thomas, radio broadcaster.

The following independent key city distributors are said to be now under contract to handle both the newsreel and the novelty series: Co-operative Film Exchange, Los Angeles and San Francisco; Standard Film, Buffalo and Albany; Graphic Film, Detroit; Cosmos Pictures, Philadelphia, and Zenith Film Co., Cleveland and Cincinnati. Negotiations for distribution arrangements in other keys are under way as well, it was reported.

Charles Kranz, general sales manager, denied reports that American Newsreel would be a "sponsored" reel, or that it would contain income-producing editorial matter of any description.

"To avoid misinterpretations of this kind," Kranz said, "we have even changed our office address, as printed on our correspondence, from General Motors Building to 1775 Broadway."

Millward Reports Loosening Of Conditions in the West

D. C. Millward, of Cosmopolitan exchange, Portland and Seattle, distributors of Big 4 product, has returned from a 5,000-mile tour of his territory, including Oregon, Washington and Idaho, and he reports that the so-called slump which hit the East during the past six months was later in finding its way to the West Coast. "It was only 90 days ago," says Millward, "that business became virtually paralyzed in this territory. However, during the past two weeks, some encouraging progress has occurred, and I believe that we are definitely coming out from under, and with the loosening of credit, a return of confidence is seeping into the field, where its effects should be far-reaching."

NEW FRAME SIZE FOR PROJECTORS TO BECOME EFFECTIVE IMMEDIATELY

Theatres and Projectionists Will Be Given Details at Once Through Distribution of 150,000 Instruction Leaflets

Aim to Do Away with Wide Variations in Apertures and Settle Difficulties Encountered Since Sound Track Arrived

Theatres and projectionists of the country will be made acquainted at once with the new uniform frame size for motion picture projection machines. Operators and theatre owners and managers throughout the United States and Canada will receive detailed instructions regarding the new uniform image frame size as established by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Improvements in the photographic appearance of the picture on the screen and increased efficiency and speed in handling pictures in the projection booth will result from the new practice recommended by the production industry's cooperative organization after two years of surveys and researches, according to Lester Cowan, executive secretary of the Academy, who also said that Hollywood studios will benefit by a similar Academy uniform image frame size in use since February 15, which permits speedier cinematography and more flexible technique in talking picture making.

150,000 Instruction Leaflets

In the educational campaign during the next two months to acquaint theatre managers and projectionists with the details of the new Academy plan, 150,000 instruction leaflets will be distributed through the exchanges. The leaflets will accompany the new releases, many of which already have been photographed in the new Academy image frame size. The leaflets will also be distributed throughout the entire industry.

Production and theatre companies adopting the uniform aperture practice plan include: Columbia, Darmour, Educational, Fox, Hal Roach, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount-Publix, RKO-Radio, Max Sennett, Tiffany, United Artists, Universal and Warner Brothers-First National.

Plan Followed Extensive Surveys

Uniformity in the size and shape of pictures as photographed in Hollywood and projected in the theatres will be attained by adoption of a uniform aperture size for the camera and one for the projector. By the new plan, the shape of theatre screens will tend away from the square and toward an oblong of approximately three by four proportions. The aperture dimensions agreed on are .631 inch by .868 inch for cameras, the center line to be .7445 inch from the guiding edge of the film. For projectors the agreed figures are .600 inch by .825 inch, the center line to be .738 inch from the guiding edge. It is said that establishment of the uniform practice will do away with wide variations in apertures which have been in effect during the past two years and will settle difficulties which have vexed studios and theatres since sound track was put on motion picture film.

The uniform aperture practice study had its inception in 1929, with a survey of new practices in projection that had developed as a result of the placing of the sound track on motion picture film. A large number of theatres using sound-on-film had given up the nearly square movietone screen shape for mechanical and other reasons and were insisting on using a reduced aperture of three by four proportions. Consequently, the heads and feet of characters were being cut off with the studios photographing at that time for the full frame. Important words in titles and other vital elements of the picture were also being cut out. The Academy undertook a comprehensive study of the problem.

This survey revealed that immediate coordination of practice was necessary, though there was still so much full frame disc release that it was too early to attempt standardization.

As a temporary measure the Academy established a "Recommended Practice," specifying that in photographic composition all vital action be kept within a rectangle marked on the camera glasses, of such size that the picture would not suffer when projected through a reduced proportional aperture.

This practice was adopted by the studios and for the past two years cameramen have thus had to fill about 20 per cent of their frame—the 10 per cent of sound track area, plus 5 per cent at the top and 5 per cent at the bottom—with unessential views of the set.

Because of the variance in projection practice, it was also essential to photograph from what became known as "three stages of composition"; first, movietone; second, the proportionally reduced area; third, full frame for disc and silent. This multiple composition and photography of wasted area on the film was both inconvenient and expensive, and as the percentage of disc release dropped with technical advances in handling sound-on-film, further study was deemed necessary.

The producers-technicians committee, chairmaned by Irving G. Thalberg, appointed a special aperture subcommittee: Virgil Miller, chairman, Joseph Dubray, G. A. Mitchell, Sidney Burton and Donald Gledhill.

Theatres and Studios Agreed

The task of arriving at a practical aperture uniformity that would also be a satisfactory compromise of widely varied opinions was undertaken vigorously. Voluminous correspondence was exchanged between the Academy offices and the studio, theatre circuit and equipment manufacturing personnel. A number of detailed reports and supplements were published on the progress of the project from time to time. It was agreed that some uniform size and proportions for camera and projector apertures could be the only solution.

Tentative specifications were drawn up by the subcommittee with the cooperation of the Bell and Howell Company, which made intensive laboratory research, particularly on shrinkage and mechanical tolerances to be allowed for. These were submitted with a plan of procedure to the studios.

The studios unanimously approved and the Academy took the next step—to present the proposal to the theatre circuits and distributors. The tentative specifications were on the basis of the largest three-by-four proportions in the camera, but did not consider any correction for angle of projection.

18 Degree Angle of Projection

In considering the standardizing proposal the theatre circuit representatives reached a definite basis for correction for angle of projection—at 18 degrees.

There were a number of varied opinions, however, as to the exact size and proportions for the new uniform aperture, studios and theatres each considering the needs from the exigencies of their own most pressing problems.

A great mass of data had been gathered, studied, evaluated. The next step was to narrow the differences in opinion down to one uni-

Advantages to Studios, Theatres, Pointed Out

In announcing the beginning of an educational campaign to acquaint the industry with the technical details of the new standard frame size, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts in Hollywood this week pointed out the following advantages of the improvement for studios:

First, saving in time now spent in setting up cameras for composition in three aperture sizes.

Second, scaffold lights can be lowered from three to five feet, making possible a reduction in the wattage or number of lighting units.

Third, the tops of sets can be lowered by as much as six feet and all sets can be reduced in width by nearly ten per cent without making any change in the placing of essential action and props as photographed during the past year.

Fourth, the single aperture will make for better composition on the set for the cinematographer and director.

Fifth, microphones can frequently be lowered from three to five feet, resulting in advantage in sound quality and convenience for the sound department.

Sixth, camera lenses can be recentered on the new aperture for better optical coverage.

The Academy also advanced certain advantages of the new frame size to theatres, including:

First, elimination of sliding apertures and other mechanical contrivances for adapting to varied film frame sizes and shapes.

Second, elimination of movable lens mounts and other centering devices required by the variations in frame sizes and shapes.

Third, increased efficiency in projection by elimination of these extra devices.

Fourth, improved projection quality.

SIROVICH HEARS HESS, MYERS ON COPYRIGHT

Measure to Be Offered Soon in House Following Approval in Principle by Many Groups and Minor Changes

Approved in principle by many groups in the picture industry, the Sirovich copyright bill will be offered to the House of Representatives at Washington in completed form in the near future. Minor amendments are expected to be made to meet objections raised since the measure was originally introduced some days ago.

A series of hearings has been held by the House patents committee at which the various industries affected have been given an opportunity to discuss the bill and suggest changes which, when shown to be desirable, were accepted and incorporated in the measure by Congressman Sirovich of New York, chairman of the committee.

Minor Changes Asked

Representatives of the film industry appeared before the committee on March 24. Both Gabriel L. Hess, representing the distributors, and Abram F. Myers, for the independent exhibitors and Allied States Association, declared that while the bill in principle meets with their approval it was desirable that some minor changes be made more clearly to define certain points.

Both sides were granted an opportunity to present their proposals in the form of suggested amendments and, as each side seeks to have changes made in the same provisions, but in opposite directions, it will be up to the committee to strike a medium which will meet the approval of both.

Reiterating the contention of the independent exhibitors that holdovers are contract violations and not infringements of copyright, Myers told the committee that "we do not want the United States to provide a penalty for violation of contract" and that he would submit amendments more definitely protecting the innocent infringer.

On the other hand, Hess pointed out that there are certain inconsistencies in the measure as now written, with one provision denying to the copyright owner certain options which are granted in another. Furthermore, he held, the infringement clauses are not adequate and certain changes will be suggested. Damages for infringement, he told the committee, are not considered by his group as penalties, but as compensation.

Questioned as to statements made at previous hearings to the effect that 10 per cent of the theatres of the country were guilty of infringements, Hess countered with the statement that of 3,000 theatres investigated during 1930 and 1931 some 40 per cent were found to be "using pictures without any authority or right to use them."

Allied Makes Two Requests

Allied makes two requests in connection with the measure, Myers told the committee:

(1) That statutory damages should not apply to the "mere holding over" of a picture in violation of a contract, and

(2) that provision should be made to protect the exhibitor against the exaction of multiple royalties for the reproduction of sound in the theatre.

In pointing to the provision concerning so-called "innocent infringement" for which the bill limits recovery to an amount which will justly compensate the owner for the use of his copyright, Myers asked Sirovich's group that it be reworded in order to protect the infringer whose holdover is brought about through an oral agreement not embodied in the contract. This, he said, is necessary to carry out the "obvious intent" of the provision. He asked substitution of a clause covering the circumstances "leading up to and surrounding the infringement."

Myers also asked that in cases where actual damages cannot be computed and statutory damages of $100 to $5,000 apply, the awarding of such damages be discretionary with the court.

Myers Attacks "Music Tax"

Myers expressed disappointment that the bill made no provision for the multiple royalties, which he said the exhibitors pay for the reproduction of sound in their theatres. Myers asked for a provision which would eliminate the "music tax" and score charge.

Under his suggestion, the producer and / or distributor or recording company as a licensee of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers would be empowered to grant reproduction licenses to theatres to make it impossible for the society to exact a seat "tax" or royalty from theatres.

In other words, Myers said, the producers and recording companies would pay all the royalties on music, just as they do on stories, and grant theatres the right to project the pictures and reproduce the sound at a single rental without further license from any source.

Declaring that the provisions of the Sirovich bill do not go far enough, and by inconsistent verbiage deprive the copyright owner of certain options intended in the bill, Hess advised the committee that he will submit a number of amendments.

Youngclaus Protection Suit Set for Nebraska Trial Soon

The test case on protection agreements brought by W. N. Youngclaus, Madison, Neb., exhibitor, seeking damages from Publix, several distributors and the MPTO of Western Iowa and Nebraska for alleged unreasonable and illegal zoning schedules, has been set for trial in Lincoln, Neb., federal court, April 18.

Paul F. Good, local attorney, is counsel for Youngclaus, who is backed by Allied States Association. Abram F. Myers, Allied general counsel, may aid Good. Nebraska and Iowa Allied units have been raising a "war chest" to aid the Youngclaus suit, the first of similar litigation planned elsewhere.

Exhibitors Plan Active Protest on Accessories Edict

Opposition to distributors' efforts to compel the return of posters and advertising accessories following their use by the exhibitor will be climaxed by protest meetings of Greater New York exhibitors and the probable formation of a national protective association of independent poster and advertising accessory supply companies. The eastern exhibitors are scheduled to meet April 1, at the Hotel Astor, New York; while arrangements for a convention of independent accessories' companies April 11 and 12, at the Stevens Hotel, Chicago, are being completed.

Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York, will preside at the exhibitors' meeting. Representatives of approximately 40 poster and accessory companies are expected to attend the Chicago meeting, which is being sponsored by eastern poster men. Appointment of counsel to represent the organization and drafting of plans to combat the proposed amendments to the copyright statutes which would prohibit the independent poster companies from using picture titles and casts will also be undertaken at the meeting.

Meanwhile, Fox, which is taking the lead in the demand for the return of copyrighted poster and accessory materials, this week requested circuit theatre organizations to comply with its contract provision covering this subject. Loew's and Warner, it is understood, have already issued instructions to theatre managers to return all copyrighted advertising material on Fox pictures to the company's exchanges immediately after the run of the individual pictures, by way of complying with the company's request. Other circuits are prepared to take similar action.

Distributors at Des Moines, where the local Allied States unit operates its own poster exchange for members, are awaiting home office instructions on the enforcement of contract provisions for the return of advertising materials. A local exchangeman estimated that two-thirds of Iowa's exhibitors patronize independent poster exchanges.

Bouchard Is Elected Head of Quebec Theatre Association

T. D. Bouchard, speaker of the Quebec legislature, has been elected president of the Quebec Allied Theatrical Industries, Inc., new association representing all branches of the theatre business in the province, including film exchanges.

Other officers include: Fernand Rinfret, first vice-president; George Ganetakos, second vice-president; E. N. Tabah, treasurer; D. A. Burpee, secretary; Arthur Hirsch, chairman of the executive committee.

Katz, Cohen Back from Coast

Sam Katz and Emanuel Cohen of Paramount returned to the home office on Monday, after a series of conferences at the Coast plant on production.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

WILL H. HAYS was formally introduced to the industry ten years ago this week at a banquet at the Astor hotel in New York. Since then, fate has wrought many changes in the lives of those who sat on the dais that night. John F. Hylan had reached the height of his career as New York's mayor, and now he is a juvenile court judge in Brooklyn. Marcus Loew and Jules Mastbaum have passed on.

Albert Lasker, then chairman of the U. S. Shipping Board, addressed the gathering, standing not far from Adolph Zukor. Only a few months ago, Mr. Zukor announced the appointment of Lasker to an important directorial post in Paramount Publix. Sydney Cohen was the militant leader of the MPTOA, his name appearing almost daily in headlines of the trade press. Cohen now operates two or three small independent theatres in the Bronx and runs a department store in New England as a sideline.

Samuel Goldwyn and Lewis J. Selznick each controlled their own company and Paul Brunet was there, as were R. H. Cochrane and Courtland Smith. Many stars of 1922 were also on the dais, among them Betty Blythe, Mae Murray and Constance Talmadge.

But this is not all, according to the Roxy press agent, who tells us that "all the shirts worn have to go to the laundry."

Admissions are slashed in half, in some instances, by an important independent theatre circuit whenever "theatre parties" are sponsored by neighborhood clubs and other organizations. On blocks of tickets up to 100, a 20 per cent reduction is granted, and 30 per cent on blocks of from 101 to 250. From 251 to 500, a cut of 40 per cent is made and on all over 500 the circuit offers the attractive reduction of 50 per cent.

BROADWAY STAGE—FROM CAMERA EYE

Noted Essayist and Critic Comments on Six Current Plays and What They Might Be as Pictures

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

Were these writings of Benjamin DeCasseres read only for their dashing and vigorous word-paintings of the plays appearing on the stage that is Broadway, 'twould be entertainment enough. Coupled with the rich experience of the critic and essayist, his comments become as well a wealth of information for those who are of the motion picture industry. Following is the fourth of his series of articles.

THE WARRIOR'S HUSBAND

"The Warrior's Husband," by Julian Thompson, dropped into Broadway like a bottle of sparkling Burgundy at a near-beer party. It clicked, crowed and chortled from the time the curtain went up until it fell on a fine bit of comic necking.

It's a gorgeous spoof of some ancient history, with dialogue that snaps and sizzles and wisecracks its way right into your laugh-cellars. It will recall to you "A Connecticut Yankee."

The Land of the Ancient Amazons. They are at war with the Greeks. The men of Amazon-Land are reduced to plain suckers: the women court 'em and chuck 'em. The men sew and keep house. The women are in armor. The men are dolled up.

Hercules, of the Greek army, a big slob (played by Al Ochs), is after Diana's girdle, worn by the Queen of the Amazons. The Queen gives the girdle to her sister. She is kidnaped by a Greek warrior. Battle scenes between the Greeks and women. The high jinks of the Queen's sister and the Greek warrior, Perseus, in the tent.

Then there is a comic Homer, who is press agent for the Greek army and the "husband" of the Queen, played by Romney Brent as the funniest bit since Ernest Truex in "Lysistrata." It's a gorgeous "kick in the toga."

Here is a picture that will move as quickly as a dollar at the sight of an uncut quart. Comic warfare, squashed men, battling beauts, crackling dialogue—a cockeyed world. It might be "dreamed." like "A Connecticut Yankee," to take the edge off of its aloofness.

THE ANIMAL KINGDOM

Here is a quiet domestic-drama picture, an adult picture, all interior, both actually and actorially. Leslie Howard should do it on the screen.

Philip Barry has written his best play in "The Animal Kingdom." He has deserted the nebulous and brittle world of allegory [illegible] purely intellectual shadow-boxing and come down to earth—that is, as near the earth as this dainty-minded playwright has ever come.

But for all the charm, freshness of theme and the superb sophistication and shimmering lightsomeness of Leslie Howard, "The Animal Kingdom" still suffers on the stage from tenuity, verbal stuffing, shadowgraphing and prolixity. Mr. Barry seems to be writing a play that we never see. It is divined behind the lattice-work of words. It is only clear if you meditate on it after each act. It never utters: it merely indicates. It will be a hundred times more vivid on the screen, where the power of focus and concentration actually create.

The fable centers around a man, Tom Collier, who has two women. One is his wife, a purely conventional, dollar-adoring person who believes that pigs is just pigs. The other is the flame of his pre-marriage days when Tom, now a respectable publisher, was a bohemian writing fellow. She is a struggling artist and the bond doesn't snap when he settles down to cold jam. Why should it? he asks. The upshot of the matter is that at the final curtain Tom leaves his legal wife, pins a big check for her on the mantlepiece, and goes to join what he calls "my wife" (his mistress).

This is the big spot in a theme picture that will interest all grown-ups.

You see, Mr. Barry is conveying to us this: the legal wife was the harlot, and the mistress was the love-woman, the real wife.

Besides the immaculate portrayal of Leslie Howard there were the intelligent innuendoes of Lord Baxter as the wife and Frances Fuller as the artist-affinity. Out of this almost whispered acting (for Mr. Barry writes in a whisper) came the healthy, vital character of Richard Regan, Tom's ex-prize-fighter waiter, played in the land of the living by William Gargan. He is a pip!—the big comic relief when this is screened. Gilbert Miller produced.

THE MOON IN THE YELLOW RIVER

Less than ten years ago—maybe it was only five years, or maybe less still, as Babby Clark says, a director said to me, "There will never be straight satire on the screen. Can't be done!"

Like all prophets, he was all wet. Today we have some corking satire. I think Lubitsch was the first to put it over.

Pictures are moving fast. Public taste is jumping overnight—in the direction of straight satire. The world wants to see things panned, roasted, hooted. A good, healthy sign!

These words come unto me after I had seen "The Moon in the Yellow River," the new Theatre Guild play, by Denis Thompson. The play is laid in Ireland of today. It is one of the most beautiful, vital, humorous, dramatic, best dialogued, best character plays I have seen on Ireland.

The plot of the Republicans to blow up the power-house, erected by a German who wants to bring "progress" to Ireland; the shooting of the Republican leader by an old pal, now a Free State soldier; the final blowing up of the power-house—this is the action; but it conveys no idea of the beauty and profundity of conception of the idealistic Republican, the cynical and disillusioned Dobelle (played superbly by Claude Rains), the earnestness of the Free Staters, and the comic relief of John Daly Murphy.

It's brilliant, human, satiric: "The Irish believe in fairness and trade in pigs" and "The birth of a nation is not an immaculate conception" are some of Dobelle's lines.

"It can't be done!" Tell it to Doctor Bullwinkle. Anything can be done on the screen. "It can't be done" always means "I can't do it."

JEWEL ROBBERY

How many jewel robberies have I seen on the stage since I first took to the theatres! I have seen the Maharajah's Koh-i-noor stolen and hocked. I have seen the Queen's necklace and the Grand Duke's only stick-pin stuck in sugar-bowls and vanish up English chimneys. I have seen—well, even Corse Payton in his famous playlet, "Jewish Jools."

This "Jewel Robbery" is by Laslo Fodor, the Hungarian satirist of the Molnar school, adapted by Bertram Block into a most amusing and sparkling comedy headed by those two competitors of the Lunt family, Mary Ellis and Basil Sydney.

It begins with a robbery in the most fashionable jewelry store in Vienna by the politest stick-up artist that ever slit a throat or murdered a policeman.

One of the customers in the shop who is lined up by the handsome, cultured crook and his pals is Teri, played by the alluring and vibrant Mary Ellis. She is quite taken with this dandy yegg and he visits her apartment up the pipe, so to speak. Well, she falls for him.

Paradox follows paradox in a most unbelievable and always entertaining fashion until when he finally escapes the police he makes a rendezvous with her in Nice. Slow fade. Orchestra: "O Sola Mia!"—pianissimo. A corking picture here—a Lubitsch gem (when that great director gets over his sentimental souce).

Stresses Legality Of Contract Again

Reiteration of the legality and propriety of the standard contract, arbitration and protection is a feature of the written decision of Justice Garrow of the court of criminal assizes, Toronto, which, just issued, supplements the oral verdict rendered recently in the conspiracy case against Famous Players-Canadian Corporation and affiliates, certain individuals and various Canadian distributors.

Justice Garrow declared the standard contract is as much to the interest of the exhibitor as the distributer, and pointed out that arbitration decisions are legal and binding on both parties. The decision repeated that insufficient evidence had been introduced to show that any combine existed.

The written decision is almost entirely a reiteration of the points made by Justice Garrow in the previous oral verdict.

David Drake, Edison's Friend And Electrical Pioneer, Dead

David F. Drake, 82, pioneer electrical engineer and friend of the late Thomas A. Edison, died at his home in San Diego, Cal., last week after a brief illness. Drake has been credited with having given Edison material aid in perfecting telegraphic systems and with electrical projects.

Among his most noted achievements are the installation of the first arc lights in New York City and Chicago, lighting ferry boats and lighting the Brooklyn Bridge and Washington Monument. Drake became associated with the Westinghouse Electric Company after five years' work at the Edison laboratories in Newark, N. J.

Kent Takes Up Duties at Fox One Week Ahead of Schedule

Sidney R. Kent began his duties as executive vice-president in charge of operations for Fox on Monday, one week ahead of the date officially announced for his entrance into the company.

Andy Smith's Son Is Killed

Andrew Smith, 3rd, six-year-old son of Andrew W. Smith, Jr., in charge of eastern and Canadian distribution for Warner, was killed this week near his home at Rye, N. Y., when he fell from the rear window of a sedan which his mother was driving, and was run over by a truck. Mrs. Smith drove two blocks before she was aware of the accident.

Named Film Board President

G. William Wolf, RKO Distributing Corporation branch manager at San Francisco, has been elected president of the local Film Board of Trade.

Horwitz at Cleveland Goes to Public for Expression of Views and Finds Most Opposing Double Featuring

Theatregoers in Cleveland—a typical American key city of the front rank—in a test case voted against the showing of two or more features on a single program and for a single attraction with a diversified group of short subjects. Much has been said in recent months, by distributors and exhibitors the country over, for and against the widespread policy of double attractions, which are generally played to the exclusion of short subjects and other types of incidental entertainment, but rarely is the public—the final consumer—taken into consideration insofar as participation in these discussions is concerned. The distributor and exhibitor have adopted a "know-it-all" attitude regarding double features.

M. B. Horwitz, general manager of the Washington circuit, operating a chain of picture theatres in Cleveland and Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, is ardently opposed to the double feature policy, although he plays double features in most of his houses, because, he says, competition forced him to adopt a policy which, he always has felt, is not expressive of public opinion.

Circulates Petition

Recently, Horwitz circulated a petition in Cleveland asking every theatre owner in the city to subscribe to a single feature policy. So convinced was he that double features were the brain child of the exhibitor and not of the public that he determined to make a test case. Consequently, he issued cards at the Heights theatre, one of the most representative first-run suburban picture houses in Cleveland, asking his patrons to voice their views on this issue. The cards were self-addressed and all postage paid, so that the patron was asked to assume no responsibility other than to express his viewpoint.

The Heights issued 2,200 cards during the week of March 20. Of the 1,400 returned, 76 per cent asked for single features with an assortment of shorts. Of the 800 who failed to reply, it was assumed that a percentage are indifferent to house policies.

The petition circulated among theatres by Horwitz has been signed by all but one Cleveland circuit, which has signified its intention of signing, and a few scattered theatre owners in remote sections of the city.

Double Bills Gain in Texas

On the other hand, in Dallas and Fort Worth, Texas, the double bill policy is rapidly coming into favor among several of the suburban theatres and a few uptown houses.

The Queen, Avenue and Oak Cliff, suburbans at Dallas, are presenting double feature programs at no increase in admission, and the Columbia theatre is giving its patrons a "break" by presenting a double bill with special prizes.

Exhibitors in the two cities advance the following reasons for the double bill: it is given to increase and stimulate business and to meet competition set up by other theatres. Quite a number of houses are giving a prize night in addition to a double feature program, all for the price that some of the other houses charge for only one feature and short subjects. As to the double feature increasing business, a few exhibitors agree that it does, and just as many say that it has not increased their receipts in proportion to the extra expense of another feature.

Hughes, Novelist, Hits Censorship

"Censorship is a ridiculous and pitiful scheme for giving a lot of jobs to people who could not earn a lot of money any other way," said Rupert Hughes, noted novelist, in a recent speech in Indianapolis during his current lecture tour. "A person who says 'let me see your picture—or book—and I'll tell you whether the public should see it or not,' must be a complete imbecile," he said.

Hughes declared: "While, of course, I might think that some producers should be horsewhipped for the scenes they have put on the screen, this is no reason why three or four people should decide what should be the literary and artistic fare for an entire commonwealth." Hughes also denied emphatically that motion pictures breed crime. "Producers never have been allowed to show any of the technique of crime, such as people picking pockets, yet they are blamed for crime waves. It is absurd, for anyone knows the Al Capones and the rest of the gangsters have no time to go to the motion pictures and wouldn't be influenced in the least if they did."

Producers Seen Unconcerned Over Cameramen's Union Plan

Producers on the Coast are showing little apprehension over the move of Joyce and Selznick, agents, in organizing a union of cameramen under contract, it is indicated from Hollywood. Producers are reported to feel that they have little cause for concern since many cameramen are at the moment idle, and it is not difficult to obtain men at the minimum wage agreed upon.

Independent producers, however, are reported much concerned by the minimum wage agreement, claiming that salaries indicated are too high for their financial situation. The independents, it is said, are seeking a separate agreement with the cameramen.

Eastman Has Development on Super-Sensitive Film Stock

Eastman Kodak Company has announced a new development of the Eastman supersensitive negative film, introduced last year. The development, described in advertising as a "simple expedient," is a gray backing on the film base.

FEDERAL TO CHECK FOR NEWSPAPERS, RADIO

Ross Sees Improved Efficiency Through Higher Type of Checkers by Possibility of Steadier Jobs and More Pay

Expansion of Federal Theatrical Accounting Service, the industry's principal box-office checking organization, to embrace checkups on newspaper circulation and surveys of radio broadcasting is announced by Harry Ross, president of the organization. Additional utilization of the company's facilities is in prospect, he said, and will tend to improve the efficiency of theatre checking services by obtaining a still higher type of individual for this work through the company's ability to offer to its checkers more regular employment and increased earnings.

The San Francisco Chronicle was the first to employ the Ross checking service to obtain vital information and statistics on metropolitan newspaper circulation. On the results of this assignment, Ross' organization is said to have obtained contracts for similar work with numerous other metropolitan dailies. The Ross circulation service obtained public reaction to editorial policies, newspaper features and news handling and also gathered vital information pertaining to news agencies handling street sales. The radio broadcasting surveys determined audience appeal of various types of programs, quality of reception, value of program hours and appoximate number of listeners.

The regular staff of Federal theatre checkers is employed for this work. For some time the company has engaged in extra services coincidental to its activities, among these being assignments to check on audience reaction to screen advertising in theatres, and certain checking work for equipment manufacturers where installments were made on the basis of percentages of the house gross. The additional work, Ross executives believe, makes it possible to attract a higher type checker and makes him less susceptible to temptations pointing toward dishonesty.

During his visit to Federal's New York office this week, Ross announced the following personnel assignments: Walter Brown, former manager of the Cincinnati office, to the Boston office; Jack Kraker, former Kansas City manager, to Cincinnati; Harold C. Lund, from the Boston office to manager of the Pittsburgh office.

New Frame Size Is Effective at Once

form proportion and size. At this point, the Academy appointed a special subcommittee, selected for their expert knowledge of the particular problem and having the subcommittee work in close cooperation with authorized representatives of studios and circuits.

There was of course considerable debating on various proposals, a number of conferences and exchanges of opinion. Information on theatre projection, involving a study of projection angle, keystone, vertical and sidewise picture distortion and other factors was gathered and turned over for the use of the subcommittee in arriving at a suitable dimension for projector aperture. Concessions were made by both studios and the circuits and on February 15 a uniform aperture practice, agreed upon by the larger companies, was announced.

Due to the fact that in the studio viewing rooms fresh prints which have not been shrunk are projected, an aperture as small as the regular projection aperture would cut the picture off around the edges. A study of this problem was made, with the assistance of the Paramount studio camera department, and a special aperture dimension recommended for the studio theatres and projection rooms.

Studio Representatives in Research

Studio executives appointed the following authorized representatives: Fox, William Steincamp, Grover Laube, E. L. Robbins; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Fred Pelton, Douglas Shearer, J. M. Nickolaus; Paramount, Virgil Miller; RKO Radio, Carl Dreher, J. O. Aalberg, William Eglington; United Artists, Thomas Moulton, Gregg Toland; Universal, C. Roy Hunter, Charles Glauner, Robert Pierce; Warner Brothers-First National, Fred Gage, Al Tandreau, Harry Cohen.

New product already is being released with the uniform picture frame size, which is the same for all types of prints; movietone, disc and silent. The new releases can be recognized by the fact that the frame lines are about four times as wide as previously. No changes have been made in the sprocket holes or sound track. An initial minor adjustment of aperture plates and projection screen masks will be necessary to show the new product to best advantage and give to the audience the full value of the picture photographed by the studio. When this adjustment has been made, all prints may be run with the uniform aperture.

musical comedy about our cops, their little tin boxes and how they angeled a Broadway show to get rid of the contents.

There are beautiful scenes in this show—some of the most beautiful ever seen on the Broadway stage. Irving Berlin and Moss Hart built it a second best to "Of Thee I Sing." There are about a hundred things that the pictures can do with it to make it bounce as high as a ski champion in the Alps.

Some of the click scenes are: the Social Register dining in the automat; in front of the Palace theatre; the stage of Reisman's theatre; the ballroom; the mirror room; the speak-easy; the station house.

Mary Boland, J. Harold Murray and Andrew Tombes are the headliners. Mary sparkles in wit and in Cartier's best.

It will take more than a dollar and a quarter to produce this, but with a top cast of comedians and Berlin's music it ought to scrape up a couple of great-grands for the producers.

THE CAT AND THE FIDDLE

This musical play is making a Broadway record. Someone is going to clean up big on this show. It's swell; it's high-toned. It jumped clean over the moon. Which is a figurative way of saying that the Jerome Kern-Otto Harbach musical play is one of the best that has visited these eyes and ears for some years.

It is all music. The story, laid in Brussels, concerns melomaniacs of all kinds, from classic-minded romantics to American hoofers. It is witty. It scintillates. It moves through beautiful scenes staged by José Ruben, who himself plays a part. It has a good story.

The Kern music is waltzy, romantic, lulling, Viennese. There is no jazz here, thank le bon Dieu! Bettina Hall sings beautifully, Eddie Foy, Jr., and Lawrence Grossmith tapped the founts of spontaneous laughter in me over and over. Doris Carson slammed her rich New Yorkese all over the Brussels revolving carpet.

Here is musical comedy at its highest and best. It is moonlight, love, laughter—and will be running when you shake out the old bathing-suit next summer. Chevalier? Yes? No?

Heads "Still" Department

Eddie Bagley, chief cameraman at the Paramount Eastern studio for the past seven years, has been placed in charge of the "still" division at the Warner Vitaphone Brooklyn plant, succeeding the late William Quinn.

Has Confidence in Manpower

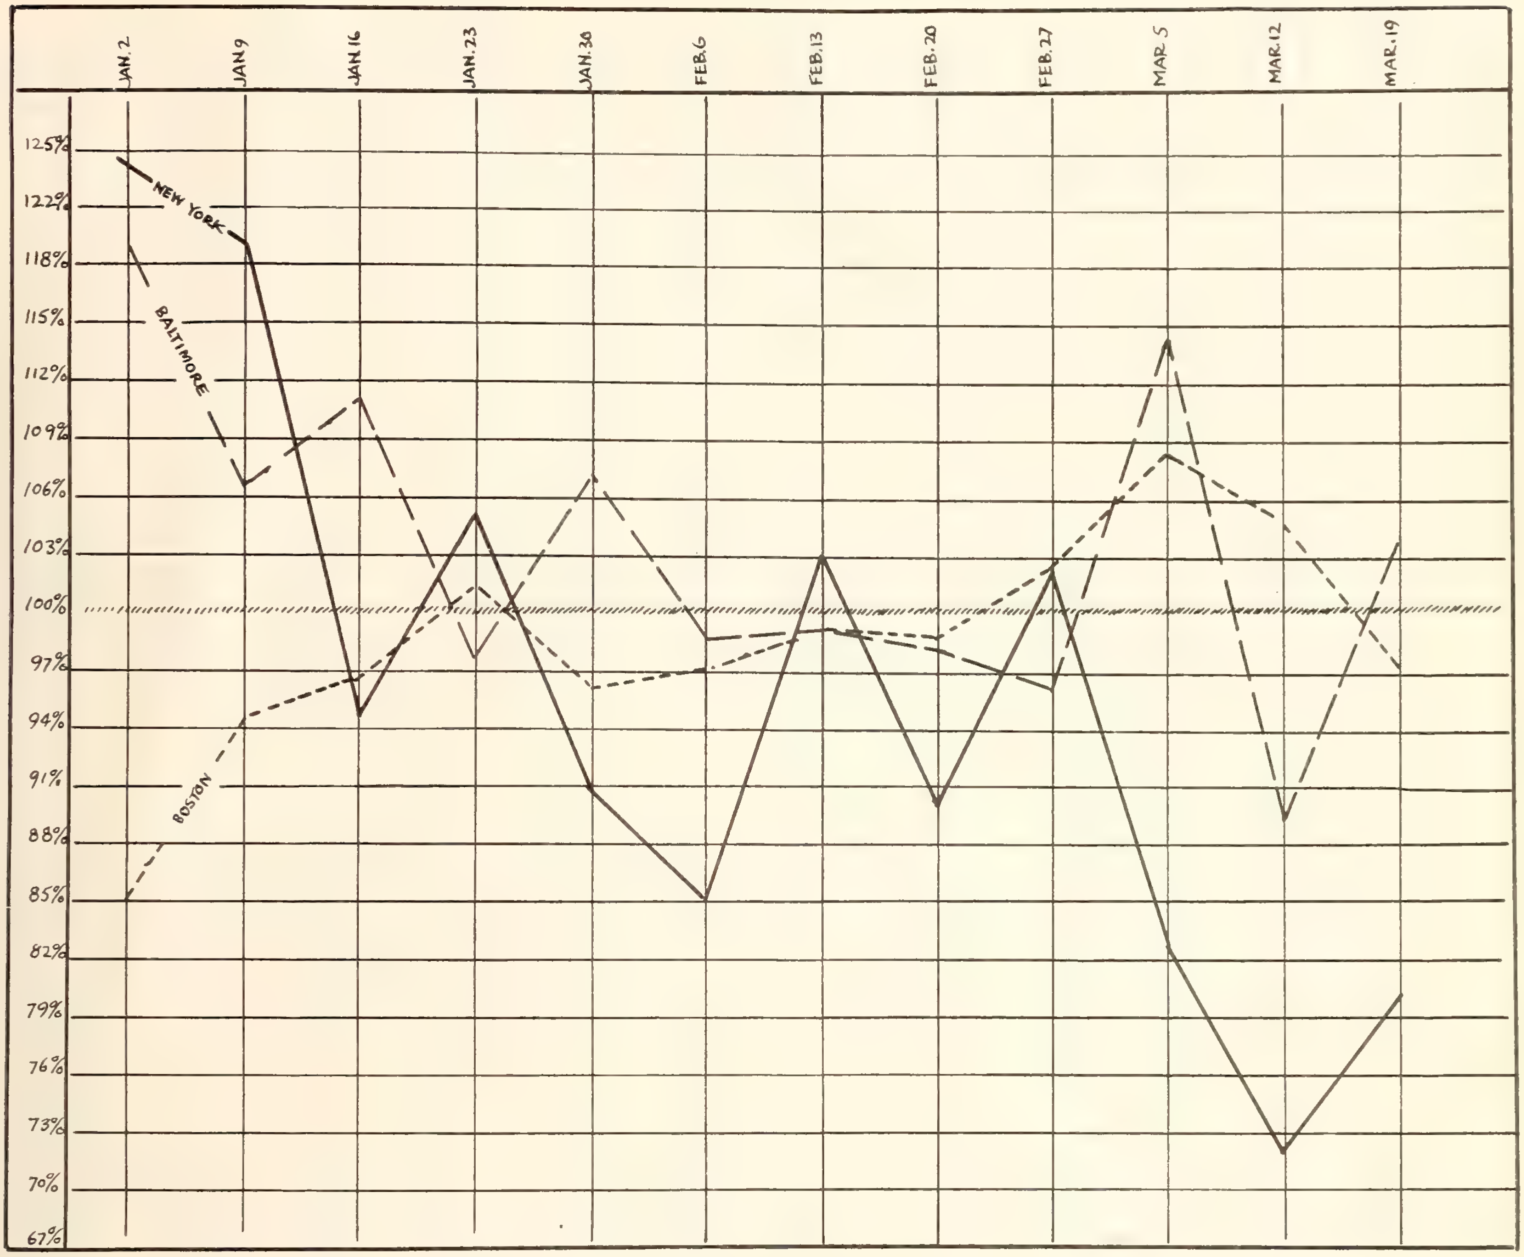
George J. Schaefer, Paramount general sales manager, expressed complete confidence in the manpower operating Publix houses over the country, on his return from a nationwide tour of theatres. He conferred with house managers and division heads.



Box office receipts in three Eastern cities—New York, Boston and Baltimore—for the twelve weeks from January 2 to March 19, inclusive, are shown in this graph, based upon Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of theatres' returns. ## William Leahy, Long a Film Agent, Is Dead in New York

William H. Leahy, theatrical agent handling contracts between authors and motion picture companies, under the firm name of William H. Leahy, Inc., with offices in New York, died last Saturday at St. Luke's Hospital after a brief illness. He was 54.

Leahy began his theatrical career in Boston after receiving his education at Holy Cross College. Many stars later familiar to film audiences came under Leahy's supervision as manager of the Majestic theatre in Boston. Later he was concert manager for the Boston Opera Company, then becoming associated with Louis B. Mayer in New York in the Anita Stewart Productions. He was head of the motion picture department of the Century Play Company for seven years before organizing his own firm two years ago. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Bertha Leahy; Timothy, a brother; two sisters and a nephew. Burial was at Derby, Conn.

Warner Takes 3 Utica, N. Y., Houses Operated by Skouras

Warner Brothers has taken control of the Avon, Utica and Majestic, three downtown theatres in Utica, N. Y. The policies of the houses will remain the same under the Warner management, with the exception of the Stanley discontinuing vaudeville. The Majestic will continue dark, at least temporarily.

Louis Lazer, head of Warner New York state houses, said Warner had taken over the leases of the three houses from the Skouras interests.

Acquires Three Westerns

Sack Amusement Enterprises, independent distributors of San Antonio, Texas, have acquired three new western features for the Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas territory. They are "Two Gun Caballero," "Riders of the Rio," "The Secret Menace." William M. Pizor is national distributor.

May Operate 10 General Theatres Firms Separately

United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings, of Delaware, receiver for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., is understood to have determined upon a procedure whereby the 10 equipment companies grouped under General Theatres Equipment are to be operated individually and apart from their holding company. Hastings was appointed February 29 by the federal court in Wilmington.

As one step in carrying out this plan, Samuel R. Burns has been elected president of International Projector Corporation, one of the group of 10, following resignation as a vice-president and secretary of Fox Film. Burns succeeds Walter Green, who becomes president of National Theatre Supply Company, a post he at one time occupied. The same procedure is in the offing for the remaining eight corporate entities which include the J. E. McAuley Manufacturing Company, Theatre Equipment Acceptance Corporation, Strong Electric Company, Ashcraft Automatic Arc Company, Hall and Connolly, J. M. Wall Machine Company, Fearless Camera Company, and the Cinema Building Corporation.

H. G. Fahlbusch, long assistant to Edward R. Tinker, president of Fox Film, succeeds Burns as secretary of the latter corporation.

Columbia Buys Two; Safron Is Promoted

Columbia Pictures closed negotiations this week for distribution rights to "The Blonde Captive," the picture of unexplored Australia which was presented on Broadway several weeks ago. It is a record of Dr. Paul Withington's expedition among the little known tribes of Australia.

Following recent announcement that the company was interested in arranging deals with stars and directors, Columbia also announced this week that it will distribute a Wheeler-Woolsey production, and has secured options on future product.

Maxwell Anderson, playwright and scenarist, has been signed to adapt "Washington Merry Go Round," story of the capital's official society. He left for the Coast on Wednesday.

Eddie Buzzell has been placed under a long-term contract by Columbia.

Jerome Safron, who recently joined Columbia in an executive capacity for the promotion of sales, has been appointed field sales supervisor, with headquarters in New York.

Court of Appeals Has Case Of Flinn Under Advisement

Nathan Burkan's legal organization this week appeared before the New York state court of appeals at a hearing on the indictment against John C. Flinn, which grew out of the Pathe studio fire in New York late in 1929 when several studio workers and extras were killed. The court took the appeal under advisement.

FROM HOLLYWOOD

By LEO MEEHAN

There is a definite trend toward having more of the advertising campaigns for motion pictures laid out on the Coast, rather than in New York as heretofore. Paramount has signed Frank Whitbeck, former West Coast Theatre publicity chief and later special advertising representative for Universal. Whitbeck will develop exploitation campaigns out here as pictures develop in the studio. A similar deal has been made at Metro, following the visit there of Howard Dietz. Pete Smith will enlarge the activities of the M-G-M publicity department to take in the mapping of exploitation campaigns, which will be forwarded to Dietz. In the past, studio publicity departments have concerned themselves largely with press contacts, with preparation of news material and press book material. Little thought has been given to actual campaigns and advertising copy.

Sues Paley for $250,000 on Paramount-C.B.S. Stock Deal

Arthur O. Dillenbech has brought suit in New York supreme court against William S. Paley, president of the Columbia Broadcasting Company, for $250,000. He alleges he was instrumental in closing the deal with Paramount whereby a Columbia half-interest was taken by Paramount in exchange for Paramount stock in the amount of $58,823 shares. Dillenbech claims he received 2,941 shares of Paramount common which Paley assured him would be repurchased by Paramount at $85 per share on March 1, 1932. He charges that Paramount refused to repurchase that stock.

AUSTRALIAN CENSOR'S BANS BRING STORM FROM BRITISH PRODUCERS

Raise Accusation of Being Opposed to Pictures from England; 6 Films Rejected Without Appeal; 20 Others Barred

Censor Pleads for More Pictures for Entire Family; Notes Marked Improvement in Quality of British-Made Films

By CLIFF HOLT, Sydney

The annual report of the Australian chief censor, W. Cresswell O'Reilly, has raised the customary storm of protest, most of it emanating from British producers and leader writers who know nothing of the internal affairs of the industry, and all of it unjustified. There is obviously an international feeling that O'Reilly is firstly, anti-British; secondly, anti-motion picture; and thirdly, insincere of purpose. Actually, he is too sincere if anything, displaying a tendency at times to delete certain risque scenes because he feels that it is his duty to do so, and not because he fears those sequences might have an injurious effect on the morals of the Australian public. The sooner the producers in England realize that O'Reilly is a censor who treats all pictures as one, that this alleged anti-British tendency is but a figment of their own imagination, the sooner the better—for them, and for the people who undertake to exhibit their pictures.

6 of 466 Features Rejected

The report shows that in 1931 Australia imported 466 features, 368 from the U.S.A., 91 from the United Kingdom, and seven from other countries. Six were rejected by the censors without appeal, and 20 more were forbidden exhibition, after appeal. In the previous year, 21 were thrown out without an appeal, of an aggregate of 580 imported.

The censor accuses film producers of a tendency to "slavishly repeat or copy stage successes, and to cater for the sophisticated adult, rather than to make pictures of a universal appeal." Clean, wholesome stories of the family type could be almost counted on the fingers of both hands, he declares, adding that if more films were produced by which everybody could be pleasurably entertained, the already large picture-public would be greatly augmented, to the benefit of both the public and the box-office. However, "In making these comments, the censorship does not overlook the virtues and values of strong dramatic quality, and would be the first to deplore the fact if its activities resulted in the exhibition of pictures suitable only for children and sub-normals."

O'Reilly notes a marked improvement both in quantity and quality of British pictures during the year, "but the proportion of those of poor quality is still very high. The smartness and sophistication, stepping over the borderline into suggestiveness and indecency, is still in evidence."

The censor concludes his remarks with the comment that he could not see any outstanding developments in production or presentation during the year, attributing that fact to the world-wide depression, and that, as the general moral standard of all films had not improved, there was no hope that the abolition of censorship would be possible in the near future.

A report, surely, that could have easily enough been received in silence, without resorting to a tirade of banal bleatings that are becoming more and more an annual farce.

Fishman on Warner Survey

Jess C. Fishman has arrived in Sydney from America to conduct a survey of Warner Brothers-First National affairs, in association with Ralph Clark, head of the organization in Australasia. He will make a comprehensive tour of all states and New Zealand, before returning to America in about six months' time.

Fishman found a country complaining sorely enough of its theatre conditions, but according to him they're similar elsewhere. "An outstanding picture still draws big money back at home," he says, "just as it does here, but average pictures don't even draw average business as they once did." During his stay in Australia, Fishman will keep on eye on the type of film that appears to be of universal appeal, and from his observation, turn in a report to New York, "because, being exhibitors as well as distributors, it is essential that we should know the requirements of audiences all over the world."

Publicity "Soul of Industry"

In between reading and hearing the advice of J. R. Collins of R. H. Macy and Company, Inc., whose comments on motion picture publicity appeared in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and other advertising experts, press agents along Broadway and over in Hollywood, will be interested in the remarks hurled by Stuart F. Doyle at a meeting of the recently inaugurated 47 Club, an organization comprised of Australian publicity men who now and then give a luncheon to someone, at which publicity, and the right and wrong methods of applying it, are propounded. Doyle made the most of his opportunity.

"They say that finance is the sinews of the industry," he told them. "I say that publicity is its soul. No matter what power one may think he possesses, he is only as strong or weak as his publicity. In the motion picture business, Australia, remote as it is from the rest of the world, has played a tremendous part in the prosperity of the business, by developing those advertising methods that, through the brains of C. L. Yearsley, have been adopted everywhere. The revenue of the Australian theatres today is probably a record for the world, taking into consideration population and depression. That is a tribute to the publicity men. . . . The greatest influence in politics and commerce is the application of showmanship and publicity. . . . The business is undergoing radical changes. At first it was an automatic business. We put on certain pictures and automatically knew what receipts they would draw. Those days, when money came easily, are gone. Now every individual attraction must be analyzed for its selling points, and every possibility must be exhausted. The difference between the right and wrong angle makes all the difference between success and failure, and that's where the publicity man comes into his own more than ever before. . . . "

Between them, the members of the 47 Club control about $2,500,000 of advertising money a year. A force to be reckoned with, undoubtedly.

Minimum Admission Clause

Numerous complaints have been heard from Australian exhibitors since the one shilling minimum admission clause was placed in contracts, more especially from those operators endeavoring to conduct a successful business in neighborhoods where their patronage is comprised for the most part of the laboring class. Their objection to the clause is based on the plea that there simply isn't sufficient amusement money available to make a shilling low justifiable; and some weight has been lent to their argument by an incident that occurred at Port Adelaide the other weekend. Several theatres were picketed in the locality, following the action of the Port Adelaide Trades and Labor Council in requesting workers to boycott cinemas which demanded one shilling as the charge for the cheapest seat.

The council based its action on the MPDA's stand in applying the one shilling ruling to a hall opened for the screening of pictures by the Waterside Workers' Federation. Hitherto the minimum here had been just half that demanded by the MPDA. Nevertheless the MPDA refused to make any concessions, pickets or no pickets, and after a few days the trouble blew over.

New Theatre for Capital

So few theatres have been erected in Australia during the last two or three years—the aftermath of an amazing activity in that direction—that it is almost in the nature of a novelty to hear of a company planning the erection of a new house in Canberra, the federal capital.

The prospectus of Civic Theatre, Ltd., with a capital of $100,000, states that by reason of the proponderance of civil servants on regular salaries among the residents, the community of Canberra demonstrably has the spending power of a city numerically twice its size. And, "because only about 40 per cent of the civil service eventually to be centralized in Canberra has been transferred to date, the outlook for the city is undeniably bright, and its future growth bids fair to be phenomenal. Furthermore, no federal or state taxation is applicable to the federal territory, so the company will not be liable to pay state income or entertainment taxes."

The Capitol theatre of Canberra has been carrying on successfully practically since the federal capital come into being.

ONE HOUR WITH YOU

Paramount 80 Minutes

All the adjectives ever applied to a Lubitsch-made picture — gay, sparkling, scintillating, smart, etc.,—can be again used to describe Maurice Chevalier's latest vehicle, "One Hour With You." Certainly it's one of the most refreshing pictures to reach Broadway in several moons and the deft touch of Ernst Lubitsch is evident from beginning to end.

The above, as well as the enthusiastic comment below, must, however, not prove misleading. Where Chevalier and Lubitsch failed to excite the natives through their former efforts there is no reason why we can claim that they will do so with this one. But for spots where this combination have been box office producers in the past they should more than repeat with "One Hour With You."

It may be a bit risque for some of the smaller towns where live certain men and women whose calling in life appears to lie in keeping some of the less conventional truths from mankind. Even these will revel in this fast moving farce, though it will be out of the question for them to admit enjoyment. But the big towns will fall for it like several tons of bricks.

The title plus the star and cast most certainly gives all you could possibly ask for in the way of strength for your ticket selling campaign. Either one or the other alone carries enough punch and b.o. appeal to make it play to juicy receipts; tied together they provide you with the makings of a record-breaking picture,—everything else being O.K. for your particular theatre and town.

Audience value leaves nothing to be desired. Ninety-nine out of every hundred theatres playing this attraction will find their audience crying for more like it.

Without a doubt your selling angles are more or less simplified as far as this picture is concerned and in all probability will be confined to stressing the names of Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald, Roland Young, Charlie Ruggles and Genevieve Tobin. If it's the same in other parts of the country as around this town, all you need do to make feminine hearts beat faster is to advertise that Chevalier, their dear Maurice, has a new thrill for them. And they'll come a-running to the box office. It's no picture for kids; not that it would do them any harm, but just because they wouldn't know what it's all about. Small towns should also play away from Sundays.

Play up the master hand of Lubitsch and the excellent supporting cast supplied Chevalier. Jeanette MacDonald not only has a beautiful voice but each picture she appears in shows the strides she is making as an accomplished actress. Roland Young's work is outstanding and Miss Tobin also does well in her part. Need we say that Chevalier clicks again? Of course he does, and in all probability it's one of the best performances he's turned in to date.

The music is particularly tuneful and "We'll Always Be Sweethearts" and "One Hour With You" are destined to become very popular. There are other songs such as "What Would You Do" and "Oh, You Mitzi," which should also go over well. It might be a good idea to bait your public with a few samples over radio as part of the advance campaign.

To sum it all up, get set on your advance campaign and build it up with stress on the star and cast, director, tuneful music and type of production. The box office will take care of the rest for any theatre that can draw to sophisticated fare. This type of audience will literally eat it up.

TARZAN—THE APE MAN

MGM 101 Minutes

An elderly gentleman sitting near the writer in the Capitol theatre the other night was overheard to remark, "S'lotta bunk, but it's darned interesting," and that about sums up the situation. It's one of the most fantastic bits of screen fare you probably ever saw but it's a safe bet that young and old will spend a thoroughly enjoyable evening's entertainment when they go to see it.

It's a simple enough process for one to sit down and pick a picture to pieces. We'll leave that to those who believe such reviews are necessary or helpful to the industry in general and you showmen in particular. We're chiefly concerned with the box office and audience possibilities of a picture and we try to convey our personal opinions strictly from the point of view of one who exhibits these pictures in his own theatres.

Both the box office and audience slants of this picture are foolproof. By this we mean to say that even if you refuse to sell this picture as you should, it will still do business. But getting behind it with the type of campaign that such a picture deserves will push it over to stand-them-on-the-sidewalk proportions. Just let loose one houseful of customers and they will be your greatest advertising pluggers. Word-of-mouth comment will send back more than ten for one.

But to get that first-audience crowd you have got to give this one of those circus campaigns with all the frills that are so sadly needed in this sluggish era of show-selling. You can depend on every dollar spent bringing back many extra dollars for your box office.

M-G-M is convinced that it has a "natural" in this picture as far as exploitation possibilities are concerned and it certainly has all the earmarks of one that can be plugged from many angles. Youngsters who have been literally starved for suitable screen fare will go for it hook, line and sinker and this means that schools and P-T associations can be contacted for essays on Africa, the jungle and the natural history angle, plus attendance en masse.

In addition to the above there will be bookstore tieups on the Tarzan books and a chance to arrange a colorful front and lobby. Even the sedate Capitol in New York secured palms, ferns, etc., for the front and hung cutout apes from the marquee to simulate some atmosphere. The press sheet on the picture contains many excellent suggestions, a majority based on the successful Baltimore campaign outlined last week in the Managers' Round Table department of this publication, and it wouldn't be a bad idea to get one as soon as you can in order to arrange your advance work. Once this is set and your first showing over, about all you'll have to do is take the money to the bank.

M-G-M has provided you with a smashing fine press book crammed full of selling ideas, ballyhoos, circus stunts, atmospheric effects for lobby and front and a thousand other angles all applicable to your own spot. Get those gags working. Many of them will cost you next to nothing. If you've bought it as a percentage picture just remember that every dollar you pay in average means plenty more in your own bank account.

GIRL CRAZY

Radio 79 Minutes

This one possessed many possibilities as a comedy of the belly-laff variety, but they injected much too much smut and thereby spoiled, in our opinion, the better angles of the original stage show. In thinking back over the audience reaction, at the theatre where we caught this picture, we came to the conclusion that it would have been just as well to leave the risque stuff out. At any rate it would have been acceptable for Sunday or kid showings. As it stands it is purely adult entertainment for those communities where a little off-color comedy is not objected to by the natives.

The title has some good box office slants which can be enhanced by several selling names. Add to these two the music slant and you have plenty to go to work on without fear of a shortage in ideas or material. Wheeler and Woolsey are past masters in fun-making and here they take full advantage of every opportunity to keep the picture alive and interesting despite its several drawbacks. Then you have Mitzi Green and she saves the day.

Besides those three you also have Dorothy Lee and Eddie Quillan, providing they mean something to your b.o.

Audience strength is not so good. Little Mitzi, when given a chance, dominates every scene in which she appears. Her impersonations are great and certainly stamp her as a real performer. Too bad they couldn't write a lot more of stuff for her into this picture. More Mitzi and less dirt would have placed this one in the real money class.

It must be played mid-week for the reasons set forth in the foregoing. So get behind it and make the most of the different angles offered for selling purposes. Play up Wheeler, Woolsey and Mitzi Green. The taxi angle offers some more ideas, the sheriff election, still more. Several of the songs will help revive the song shop tieups which you have been away from since the first batch of musical films flooded the market.

A livewire campaign is going to bring home the bacon with this attraction and you have no excuse for not giving it everything you have. Make sure that they know they are in for an evening of "crazy" comedy and they'll be satisfied after they've seen it.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT

Fox 80 Minutes

Here is a "cop" picture that is boosted 'way up by reason of a more than capable cast. Individually and collectively they contribute a swell performance with the result that after seeing it your audience should feel highly satisfied with your show.

The title is none too strong from the box office point of view because it does not convey the theme of the picture except where you definitely tie them together, with the further addition of a cast that holds several strong marquee and box office names. Working in a policeman's head or one of the mats from your local Fox exchange will get the police idea across without any trouble.

Audience value is exceptionally good. The hero even rides for a fall or two with the result that sentiment in the audience may swing to Bellamy for a while. But a typical (and there ought to be many a "typical") ending sends them home smiling.

The police slant is still new enough to war-rent making full use of it wherever you are in a position to get the local force behind you. Play it up strong and make it count for as much as any other selling angle you inject into your particular campaign. The motorcycle squad men will find it right up their alley.

The informative review in the HERALD will tell you enough about the picture to provide you with a fairly accurate idea of what it is all about. After reading it through, get your press book and comb it for suggestions that may apply to your situation. We've looked it over and found many good ones that are applicable to most spots.

There's nothing objectionable for kids or Sunday showings and this picture will certainly come through with a good account at the box office where you give it more than an even break. It's a good picture and with such names as Spencer Tracy (who should be played up strong for future b.o. strength), Sally Eilers, El Brendel, Ralph Bellamy and Dickie Moore, you ought to get somewhere with this one.

THE BROKEN WING

All that is worthwhile in this picture will have to be attributed to the determined efforts of Lupe Velez and Leo Carrillo to do their best with a weak vehicle. The talented and colorful little actress struts, hurls invective, makes impassioned love and is in ten places at one time; while Leo Carillo, as a Mexican Al Capone, turns in as breezy a portrayal of his role as any one could ask for.

Box office appeal will have to depend on a title that can be played around with quite a bit by showmen who know how to capitalize on every possible slant. Avoid overselling because it may hurt whatever confidence your customers may have in the truth of your merchandising. A screening will open up several avenues for profitable selling that fits in perfect with your individual community.

Audience strength is lacking in more ways than one. But if sold sensibly and along the lines best suited for your type of audience it can get by without any kicks. Surround it with the type of shorts that will strengthen the show as a whole.

While there's considerable dialogue involving the trade name "B-V-D," those letters have come to mean most any kind of "shorts." Thus there certainly is a corking chance to tie-up with every B-V-D dealer in these United States. This is made possible through inability on the part of the aviator to recall his name. Lolita finds "his initials," B-V-D, on his underwear and from that time on he is known to her as BVD.

It doesn't seem advisable to play up the airplane angle suggested by the title too strong for reason that this constitutes but a small part of the picture. Sell Lupe Velez as giving her usual colorful, vivacious characterization and you can also promise that patrons will be entertained by Carrillo.

THE GAY CABALLERO

This ought to fill the bill in great shape for those who want an oldtime Western picture keyed to dialogue and sound, for it's essentially that and nothing more. The writer witnessed it at the Roxy and while it seemed rather out of place as fare for the big house, the audience apparently got their money's worth.

The title is too suggestive of a "Western" to make it dependable for b.o. delivering in dollars and cents unless you back it up with something stronger in the way of names and atmosphere, of which there appear to be enough of to go around. Selling somewhat along the lines of a sort of antidote after a steady run of sophisticated dialogue offerings may help where you can make enough capital out of such an idea. Local circumstances and previous picture runs must guide you in this connection. They may find it a welcome relief after sitting through the recent cycle of converted stage plays with little or no action.

Audience value will satisfy where selling has been handled along the lines set forth in the foregoing paragraph. O'Brien is OK for the part he plays and of course McLaglen's following warrants a strong play in your advertising.

There is enough hard riding and fighting throughout the picture to satisfy the most ardent Western picture fan. O'Brien offers his usual active portrayal and puts on a fight in a cantina with his Mexican rival that will remind you of the old silent picture days. Incidentally, two or three bewhiskered tricks are resorted to in this sequence, but seem still to be able to get by.

You will of course want to play up the names of O'Brien, McLaglen, Conchita Montenegro and Linda Watkins, although the latter has but a small part and Miss Montenegro's work falls far short of what she is capable of doing. In this picture she appears rather listless. Stress the action and Western scenery, for that's about all you've got aside from conscientious work on the parts of O'Brien and McLaglen. There is a troop of U. S. Cavalry worked into some of the late footage, and you might use that fact to advantage.

Girl Crazy

(Radio)

Comedy

Radio offers a comedy, with comparatively little music, based upon the well known Broadway musical comedy of the same name. Robert Woolsey and Bert Wheeler, Radio's comedy aces, take care of the amusement angles, with the assistance of Eddie Quillan, Dorothy Lee, Arline Judge, Kitty Kelly, and the very much apparent Mitzi Green.

The story is more or less nonsense, in keeping with stories upon which are hung the comedy lines of musical comedy efforts. The story affords opportunity for comedy and here serves its purpose rather well, if the very frequent bursts of laghter from the audience at the RKO Mayfair in New York are of any significance.

The patrons were at times in a high state of hilarity, as Wheeler and Woolsey, at a dude ranch in Arizona, register their antics in their own peculiar way. Woolsey, cigar and checkered suit, is a gambler who, with wife Kitty Kelly, goes to Arizona at the behest of Quillan, who has turned a ranch into a night club known as a dude ranch. Wheeler, taxi driver, is hired to drive them from Chicago, because train fares have to be paid in advance. At the ranch, Wheeler is induced to stay, and finds his sister, Mitzi, already there. Mitzi drew large portions of laughter as the pestiferous young sister, while her impersonations of Edna May Oliver, Roscoe Ates, Bing Crosby and particularly George Arliss, received a splendid reception.

Woolsey and Quillan persuade Wheeler to run for sheriff against sheriff-killing Stanley Fields, bad man. Fields promises to kill Wheeler after he is selected, and his pursuit of the frightened sheriff and Woolsey supplies many of the comedy moments. Romance is handled by Quillan and Arline Judge as the postal girl on the one hand, and by Wheeler and Dorothy Lee on the other. Woolsey has his own troubles when he tries to do things of which his wife probably would not approve. It all turns out in the end, with the defeat of Fields and to the satisfaction of the romances. There is a certain amount of slapstick in the effort, which on the whole seemed heartily enjoyed by the audience.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by William Seiter. Authors, John McGowan and Guy Bolton. Art director, Max Ree. Screen play by Tim Whelan. Adaptation by Herman Mankiewicz. Music by George and Ira Gershwin. Cameraman, Roy Hunt. Sound, Hugh McDowell. Film editor, Artie Roberts. Release date, March 25, 1932. Running time, 75 minutes.

Symphony of Six Million

(Radio)

Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

In "Symphony of Six Million," from a story by Fannie Hurst, Gegory La Cava has painted a portrait of the Ghetto, spawning spot of genius and graveyard of struggling millions. The development of sound pictures has made it possible to articulate this story in its telling.

Authoritative comment credited the picture with that rare combination: a deeply human story, powerful drama, natural comedy, inspired direction and unusual casting. The music of which there is much, was composed and directed by Max Steiner, and as an example of thematic music is worthy of study. It is used in almost every foot, and for the very deliberate purpose of building and sustaining the emotional values of the dialogue, the incidental background noises and the picture itself.

The story is extremely simple. A boy, born in New York's teeming East Side, sees so much suffering he is inspired to become a great surgeon that he may help to alleviate it. Accomplishing his ambition, he moves from the Ghetto to "Uptown" and riches. But prescribing pills for neurotic millionaires and their more neurotic wives at tremendous fees does not make a great surgeon. His masterful fingers lose their soul, until certain events bring him back to his senses.

Concomitant with this is the family life of the Jews, their religious depths as powerful as their instinct for material gain. Devotion of children to father and mother because father and mother have set the standards of devotion from the day of birth, the mutual joy in success and mutual grief in adversity, the philosophy which prompts a man to feel down but never out—these are the things which dominate the theme.

Ricardo Cortez was splendidly received. He treats the role of Felix Klauber with the deep respect it deserves. Young Lester Lee helped him by making Felix as a boy the sort one would predict great things for when he grew up. The romance is between Cortez and Irene Dunne, the latter as a crippled teacher of the blind. While Miss Dunne's is a rather passive role, she is able to give it fineness and beauty, it was agreed. Termed "very outstanding" are Gregory Ratoff and Anna Appel as the father and mother. Both were greeted with delight throughout the picture. Other excellently received performances are given by Noel Madison, John St. Polis, Helen Freeman, Lita Chevret.

Produced and distributed by Radio. Directed by Gregory LaCava, from Fanny Hurst's story. Supervised by Pandro Berman. Adaptation and dialogue by Bernard Schubert and J. Walter Ruben. Musical director, Max Steiner. Film editor, Archie Marshek. Cameraman, Leo Tover. Recording by George Ellis. Release date, April 15, 1932.

One Hour With You

(Paramount)

Comedy with Music

This is rather a comedy, of the light, sophisticated domestic type, with music, than a musical comedy, it may be recorded in the interests of accuracy, since the absent chorus of dancing femininity, a usual component of the musical comedy, is the only divergence from the true manner and mode of the stage musical in this film.

The unmistakable touch of Ernst Lubitsch is apparent throughout with the smartly clever innuendoes of sophistication, well spaced, drawing effusive expressions of thorough enjoyment from a large audience at the Rivoli in New York, the neighboring Rialto sharing the local run of the film.

Maurice Chevalier's personality, in the rendition of melodious lyrics, bubbles in its anticipated fashion, being ably seconded by attractively blonde and striking Jeanette MacDonald, as the wife with whom he is very much in love. They were accorded a vociferous reception by the assembled patrons, as were Genevieve Tobin as the friend of Miss MacDonald, and a habitual divorcee who sets sail in the direction of Chevalier, to his embarrassment and the glee of the audience. Also supporting the leads effectively, are Charlie Ruggles as Chevalier's friend, with his funny heart-wringing love for Miss MacDonald; and Roland Young, as Miss Tobin's husband, who finds enough evidence from Chevalier's affair to divorce Miss Tobin, and who renders his lines with a calm and nonchalance which is at once humorous and appealing, it was generally agreed.

The story is of approximately the same importance and consequence as that of any very musical musical comedy on the stage, but what there is of it provides numerous amusing situations, and endless opportunities for the renditions of the highly appealing melodies of Oscar Straus, to which Leo Robin concocted amusing lyrics. Richard A. Whiting prepared the interpolated music.

Sets are lavish, but befit the atmosphere of ultra-smartness which pervades the light story and its treatment. Worthy of mention are the song numbers, which will undoubtedly enjoy their day at court. Authored by Straus, Robin, Whiting or all three are "One Hour With You," "We Will Always Be Sweethearts," "What Would You Do," "What A Little Thing Like A Wedding Ring Can Do," "It Was Only a Dream Kiss," "Oh, That Mitzi," "Three Times a Day."

The Gay Caballero

(Fox)

Western

From the active novel of the Mexican border of the same title by Tom Gill, Fox has constructed a vehicle for George O'Brien, who may be said to rank as rider and fighter, with first or guns.

The story is one reminiscent of an earlier day in the motion picture, with the addition of the effectiveness made possible through the use of sound and the talking technique. O'Brien does things in the old fashioned way, and gives every evidence of enjoying himself hugely. An audience at the Roxy seemed to derive a fair amount of entertainment from the refreshing and dashing activity of O'Brien and Victor McLaglen, mustached, as the mysterious El Coyote of the border.

Conchita Montenegro offers the heroine, wealthy niece of C. Henry Gordon, whose ruthless tactics have long terrorized the settlers and who killed O'Brien's father, leaving our hero a pauper. Gordon's large-sized henchman, Weldon Heyburn, thinks much of Miss Montenegro, and much less of O'Brien when he and Conchita seem so much attracted to each other. McLaglen, wealthy rancher, is revealed as the masked bandit who does what he can, with his band, to balk Gordon's efforts. O'Brien throws his efforts to the support of McLaglen, an old friend of his father, we understand.

United States cavalry, on the trail of El Coyote, unknown, traps his men in a canyon, and in order to save them, McLaglen admits his identity, is imprisoned. To save McLaglen, O'Brien assumes the role of El Coyote and continues where McLaglen left off. With the bandit again on the loose, it is assumed that McLaglen is not El Coyote and he is released. Hearing that Conchita is a prisoner in Gordon's home and is being forced into marriage with Heyburn, O'Brien rides to the rescue, cleans up the household in the grand manner of the western hero and rides away with Conchita, as a wronged settler dispatches Gordon with a knife and remarkable aim.

There is comparatively little made of scenic effects, with a concentration on action. Linda Watkins was found effective in a small part as the fiancee of Laglen.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Alfred Werker. From the novel by Tom Gill. Adaptation by Philip Klein and Barry Conners. Editor, Al De Gaetano. Cameraman, George Schneiderman. Sound, Eugene Grossman. Release date, February 28, 1932. Running time, 60 minutes.

The Crowd Roars

(Warner)

Auto Race Drama

James Cagney, young and very much two-fisted in speech and action, here portrays an automobile racing driver, who rushes to fame, rushes equally rapidly to oblivion in an effort to save a younger brother and then returns to the heights amid an avalanche of bursting, motor-roaring sound which carries almost throughout the picture.

The atmospere of the race track echoes and re-echoes through the film, with the tumultuous crowds and the authentic pictures of the large tracks lending a touch which unquestionably had its effect on a capacity audience at the Winter Garden in New York.

The patrons reacted vigorously to the thunder and flash of the races, which are replete with speed, crashes, fires and those other components, apparently, of auto racing. Cagney's performance was well received, as were those of Joan Blondell, the girl who falls in love with Eric Linden, as Cagney's brother; Ann Dvorak, in love with Cagney, and Miss Blondell's friend; Frank McHugh, as Cagney's relief driver. The players in the minor roles were found to be competent.

Cagney, famed driver, attempts to dissuade Linden from racing as a profession but is unsuccessful. The boy meets Miss Blondell and they fall in love with each other. Cagney, in an attempt to keep his brother from what he believes is the evil influence of Miss Blondell, breaks with Miss Dvorak, although he loves her. Again unsuccessful, he fights with his brother and discharges him just before a big race. The boy gets another car and enters. McHugh, in Cagney's other car, attempts to stay between the two on the track and is killed when Cagney, enraged, forces his car through the fence in flames.

At the big Indianapolis race, Cagney appears as a tramp and is found at the track by Miss Dvorak. During the race, Linden's arm is hurt, and Cagney. urged by Miss Dvorak, drives for him. They account for the race, and we are given to understand, the rejuvenation of Cagney.

The Broken Wing

(Paramount)

Comedy-Drama

Leo Carrillo here offers his own version of the sort of role and approximate situations which formed the central motivation of "The Bad Man," which spread the name of Holbrook Blinn far and wide in the story of the legitimate theatre in days long gone. Carrillo, Mexican "captain" who does as he pleases and when he pleases south of the border, may fairly be said to have "tickled" an audience at the New York Paramount, with his exaggerated self-importance, carried to the Nth degree, with his high-handed manner, and with his peculiarly amusing massacre of the King's English.

Opposite, in an excitable and vivacious role which she plays to the limit, Lupe Velez proved a good running mate, if audience approval is any criterion. The patrons chortled and gurgled when she tries to talk English and when she attempts to make Melvyn Douglas fall in love with her. Her phrase, "baloney-bunk," is novel and funny, and when she calls Douglas, amnesia victim of a plane crash, her "Mr. B. V. D.," which she obtains from his underthings, the audience was highly amused.

The story is the same, with variations. Carrillo, ardent suitor to Miss Velez, is getting nowhere, rapidly, while Miss Velez awaits the "king of hearts" whom the cards tell her, will come in a storm. Douglas does that, is hurt in the crash and put to bed, suffering from loss of memory. When it looks too serious, Carrillo jails him, warns him out of the country. George Barbier, old resident and guardian of Miss Velez, remonstrates, but Carrillo is firm. Miss Velez storms, but he is still firm. He is about to shoot Douglas, when Willard Robertson, as the mining engineer on the spot, frames a past for the memory-vacant Douglas, by bringing down his own wife, Claire Dodd, to pose as the spouse of Douglas. It almost works, until Douglas, who has been in several sequences attempting to recall through the whistling of a bird, suddenly remembers, repudiates the hoax, and stands by Lupe. It looks rather bad for the lot, with Carrillo's gun in his hand, when the Mexican soldiers walk in.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Lloyd Corrigan. From the play by Paul Dickey and Charles Goddard. Adapted by Grover Jones and William Slavens McNutt. Cameraman, Henry Sharp. Release date, March 25, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

Tenth Olympiad

Olympiad Productions—State Rights

Interesting Short

Showing 1,800 feet of expertly produced shots of Los Angeles and Hollywood and the various sites and buildings where the forthcoming tenth annual Olympic Games will be held, this picture is intended primarily to arouse interest of the nation in the international sports competition, which is scheduled for late in the summer. The producers have crowded into this reel dozens of intimate views of the city itself and of the surrounding country. They show many of the auditoriums, fields, waterways and sports centers, all widely scattered, and many specially built, where the competitive events will be run off. Several night shots are unusually appealing, while the voice of the narrator does much to arouse interest in the subject and that which it represents. Governor Rolph of California opens the reel with a welcome to those who intend visiting the state for the games. Produced independently in Hollywood, the reel is being distributed on the state rights market by Arthur Hicox and Pat Campbell of Los Angeles. George Dillon has the franchise for the East.—Running time, 19 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts from 180 houses in 30 key cities for the calendar week ended March 26, showed a decline from the previous calendar week, ended March 19, when 175 theatres in 29 cities grossed $2,076,586. This compares with an aggregate figure of $2,011,099 for the following week, the decrease being $65,487. Only one new individual theatre high record was established during the later week, at the Warner in San Francisco with "Fireman, Save My Child"; while 19 new low records were noted. The previous week saw three new "highs" and five new "lows" established.

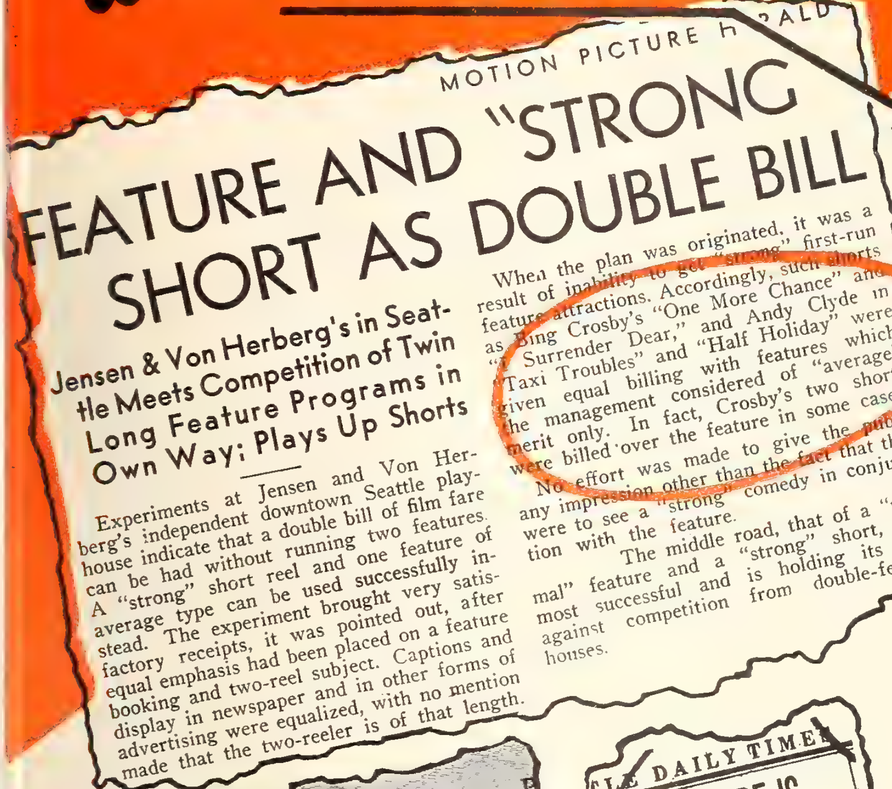
SHOWMEN BEAT DOUBLE FEATURE OPPOSITION with STRONG SHORT SUBJECTS



MOTION PICTURE HERALD

FEATURE AND "STRONG SHORT AS DOUBLE BILL

Jensen & Von Herberg's in Seattle Meets Competition of Twin Long Feature Programs in Own Way; Plays Up Shorts

Experiments at Jensen and Von Herberg's independent downtown Seattle playhouse indicate that a double bill of film fare can be had without running two features. A "strong" short reel and one feature of average type can be used successfully instead. The experiment brought very satisfactory receipts, it was pointed out, after equal emphasis had been placed on a feature booking and two-reel subject. Captions and display in newspaper and in other forms of advertising were equalized, with no mention made that the two-reeler is of that length.

When the plan was originated, it was a result of inability to get "strong" first-run feature attractions. Accordingly, such shorts as Bing Crosby's "One More Chance" and "I Surrender Dear," and Andy Clyde in "Taxi Troubles" and "Half Holiday" were given equal billing with features which the management considered of "average" merit only. In fact, Crosby's two shorts were billed over the feature in some cases.

No effort was made to give the public any impression other than the fact that they were to see a "strong" comedy in conjunction with the feature.

The middle road, that of a "normal" feature and a "strong" short, was most successful and is holding its own against competition from double-feature houses.

ANDY CLYDE IS FEATURED STAR IN NEW COMEDY

Henpecked Husband Turns Tables and Becomes Gay Lothario in Mack Sennett Comedy on Liberty Bill

The announcement that Andy Clyde will appear in a new comedy is always an event of interest to lovers of screen comedy and his latest opus announced for the Liberty Theatre tomorrow is the Mack Sennett-Andy Clyde comedy for Educational, "Half Holiday."

Clyde, of course, will appear as the lovable, bewhiskered "Pop" Martin and this time he starts a one-man revolt against a domineering wife and mother-in-law and goes absolutely "on the loose."

Aiding and abetting Andy Clude in this funfilm are Patsy O'Leary, Dorothy Granger, Alice Ward and Bill Davidson, all old and experienced comedy players. "Babe" Stafford, one of Mack Sennett's proteges, directed the picture, which is said to be one of Clyde's best comics.

Another feature of the new Liberty Theatre program will be "China[illegible]own After Dark," with Rex Lease, [illegible]rmel Myers and Barbara Ke[illegible] in the principal roles.

SCHOOL AND SCREEN

by

RITA C. McGOLDRICK

FOR many months we have watched the up-sweep of club and group organization registering itself with determined influence upon the motion pictures of the community. This whole movement has sprung from the germ of an idea, to a national expression. In all of this activity we have watched the clubs knocking at the theatre man's door. Too often they have knocked and found no one at home. Where they have gained admission the welcome has been half-hearted. Here and there has been a spontaneous cordiality, resulting in a strong cooperative movement bringing better business to the theatre man and better pictures to those people who were interested in them.

Endorsed by MPTOA

Now we have witnessed a new and extraordinary circumstance. At the twelfth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, meeting at the Hotel Mayflower in Washington, the theatre men, aware of the growing power of the organized public, adopted the following resolution:

"RESOLVED: That it is the sense of this convention that pictures suitable for the entire family, but with sufficient box-office drawing power, be produced in greater volume so that the same may meet with the endorsement of the Better Film Councils and other film welfare organizations throughout the country.

"We believe pictures of this type will not only assist in a large measure to improve business in community theatres but will, as well, raise our industry throughout the nation to a higher level of good-will than it has ever enjoyed before."

This is truly a long jump forward in the hoped-for direction. It should be an incentive to the thousands of better films committees needing a degree of encouragement to proceed with the work to which they have been assigned. It will interest many chairmen to learn that thousands of theatre managers are selecting week-end programs from "School and Screen" service. If their work is to succeed they need the intelligent support of all church and school groups in their locality. Forward-looking cooperation is the key to this whole problem.

Many Unusual Films

Within the past month many unusual and interesting pictures have been released by the great studios and have come to us for preview. Many of these are outstanding productions, brilliant in technique, story form, and artistic detail. But out of a vast array of material there have been fewer than usual to merit the grade of "School and Screen's" standards.

For this issue we have selected for your consideration those few pictures that seem to us to have unusual educational value. The first of these, and the greatest, notwithstanding misleading publicity which has fallen like a blight upon it, is "Tarzan, the Ape Man," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's brilliant reproduction of the familiar story of Edgar Rice Burroughs.

This is a jungle picture in which Tarzan, supposedly the son of noble parents and lost in the jungle, grows to young manhood with a superb physique and an intimate knowledge of the ways of the jungle's creatures. He lives among the apes and is understood by them. He rules the elephants who obey his call and his command.

There is a mild and inconsequential love story, quite superfluous to the action of the picture, which is made up of a series of breath-taking adventures, with thrill piled upon thrill. This is one of the most exciting pictures we have ever seen, and in its photography one of the most beautiful.

Added to this, there are many animals of the jungle, monkeys like little human creatures in their wisdom and sophistication; ferocious beasts in death conflict; herds of zebras and stampeding elephants. There are great hippopotami, alligators, and, of course, strange tribes of African savages.

Johnny Weissmuller is the Tarzan of the picture and Maureen O'Sullivan the girl who loses her way in the tangled forest and eventually falls in love with him. Weissmuller is a convincing Tarzan.

His superb physique and muscular control make it easy for him to accomplish almost unbelievable feats of physical skill.

It matters very little whether "Tarzan, the Ape Man" was filmed in darkest Africa or brightest Hollywood. It has the full illusion of reality. Boys will love it. All school children will learn many things from it. For young chidren it will be found too exciting and at times too harrowing. But "Tarzan, the Ape Man" is an important picture.

"Avalanche"

Far removed from the exotic locale of the tropical jungle is this Alpine drama of life as it is lived in a hell of snow and ice and a heaven of amazing cloud beauty at the very crest of Mount Blanc, where a lonely young scientist, a weather expert, tends the Government's observatory, 15,750 feet up in the Alps. A most amazing photographic achievement, this story is built on a frail episodic and inconsequential theme.

The trivial romance offers opportunities, however, for the picturing of high adventure in a frozen wilderness, where the distances are almost unbelievable; where the clouds flow like slow seas between giant crests of stone; where the crevasses are cut sharply into the very heart of the world. A slipping mountain climber, dislodging the first mound of snow, unlooses the avalanche which flows down the mountains and pours itself like a foaming cataract of steam overy dizzy cliffs. We have never seen snow as it is in this picture.

"War in China"

Perhaps the most important educational picture of the month is this authentic two-reel film story, released by Educational, which brings into the theatre with vivid realism the drama, the tragedy, and the devastation that is going on in China. The cameramen, with official permissions, wormed their way into the very heart of the conflict. They succeeded in obtaining thrilling shots of the Japanese air raids, of villages standing in smoking ruins, and

War in China

Educational

John S. Young, radio announcer, describes action.
H. V. Kaltenborn prepared descriptive narrative.

This two-reel document of the dramatic conflict between Japan and China is easily one of the most important pictures from an educational and historic standpoint that we have had on this whole subject. Made with the official permission of the Chinese General, Yuan Kai-Shek, the cameramen at the risk of their lives succeeded in obtaining intimate and dramatic pictures of the ravaging conflict. Current Events Classes, Study Clubs, students and Parent-Teacher groups should not fail to see this pictorially recorded bit of current history.

Tarzan, The Ape Man

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Feature Players: Johnny Weismuller, Neil Hamilton, Maureen O'Sullivan.

This is a highly imaginative and glorified version of the familiar Tarzan tales of Edgar Rice Burroughs. It tells the story of the charming young English girl lost in the jungle, who is captured and carried away by Tarzan, supposedly the son of noble parents, who has grown up among the apes and beasts, knowing no language but theirs, and no other companionship. There is an inconsequential love story which might well have been disposed of, for the major interest of the picture lies in its fast action, abounding thrills, its variety of animals which roam before the camera, and in its photography of tangled jungle with its rivers, its highlights and depths of shadow. Young people will be particularly interested in Johnny Weismuller, world champion swimmer, who, as Tarzan, demonstrates the value of athletic training.

1. Who is the author of the Tarzan stories?
2. What were these stories about?
3. Is the Tarzan in this picture a believable character?
4. What was the expedition of English traders in search of?
5. Why is this commodity valuable?
6. Name three of its uses.
7. What is the legend of the dying elephant?
8. How many kinds of animals can you remember seeing in this picture?
9. Why is Tarzan called "the Ape Man"?
10. Describe the hut in which he lived.
11. In what strange manner did he make his way through the jungle?
12. What does the word "jungle" mean?
13. Name some of the things you saw growing there.
14. Name some of the ways in which the animals showed their friendliness to Tarzan.
15. Describe one of the strange tribes of savages shown in this picture.
    (a) The chiefs with their magnificent head dresses; or,
    (b) The dwarfs who captured the English party.
16. Describe the stampede of the elephants.
17. This is a picture of thrills. Name three of its most exciting moments.
18. Describe the graveyard of the elephants.
19. What did you consider the most beautiful scene in this picture?
20. What thing about it did you like best?

Write a 200-word composition on "Tarzan, the Athlete."

Avalanche

First Division

Feature Players: Leni Riefenstahl, Sepp Rist, Ernst Udet.

"Avalanche" is the story of the young scientist serving as the Government's weather expert at the lonely observatory on the crest of Mount Blanc. Actually filmed at a height of 15,750 feet above sea level, the pictorial background is wothout doubt the most amazing spectacle of snow and ice, razor-edged cliffs, and yawning crevasses that has ever come to the screen. A trivial romance offers an excuse for a thrilling rescue by a party of mountain climbers who have to find their way over the most perilous passes in the Alps.

This picture is a notworthy spectacle of mountain grandeur and snow and cloud beauty. The avalanches tumble from the heights like foaming cascades, apparently as soft as steam. The cloud banks settle below the peaks like milky seas. One is willing to forgive and forget the amateurish episode of plot in the glorious reality of photographic achievement.

1. Where is Mount Blanc?
2. How does it compare with the other great mountains of the world?
3. Describe the weather observatory at its peak.
4. What type of apparatus was in use at the observatory? (There is much valuable information to be learned about weather observatory of this kind. Consult your reference books and encyclopedia.)
5. How many electrical or scientific instruments did you note in the weather expert's cabin?
6. What is an avalanche?
7. What causes the avalanche?
8. What is a crevass?
9. Describe a glacier.
10. How do the men of the Alps travel from one place to another?
11. What is their greatest hazard?
12. What calamity befell the weather expert?
13. How did he summon help?
14. Describe three thrilling incidents in the trip of the rescue party.
15. Describe the flight of the plane as it neared the peaks.
16. How does the change in seasons effect the ice pack?
17. How did this condition hamper the work of the rescuers?
18. What did the rescuers find when they reached the cabin?
19. Describe the cloud effects that you noticed.
20. What was the most thrilling moment of the picture?

Write a 250-word composition on "Lost in the Alps," or, memorize 8 lines of a famous poem on Mount Blanc.

SCHOOL AND SCREEN

of roadways cluttered with terror-stricken refugees, burdened with what poor possessions they could salvage from the humble homes they had left burning behin dthem.

For those groups in the community intelligently concerned with the building up of a series of high grade programs to win the interest of school officials and their cooperation in sending students to the theatre where an outstanding picture is showing, it would be well to note another short picture that might be importantly correlated with these other two. This is Vitaphone's latest travel talk by Mr. E. M. Newman, titled "Twelve Thousand Miles Around Russia." For months Mr. Newman traveled the tremendous distances of that turbulent country studying its economics and politics, and collecting thousands of feet of film, which have been assembled authentically.

"School and Screen" is actively interested in the development of better films committees and motion picture councils. It offers concrete help to theatre men seeking club and group contacts in their communities. A letter addressed to this department will bring helpful available material.

Brooklyn Circuit's 40 Houses to Use School and Screen

The forty theatres of the Fox circuit in Brooklyn which have been taken over by the Randforce Amusement Company, under the direction of Samuel Rinzler and Lewis Frisch, have announced an endorsed picture policy based on the "School and Screen" service and the "Junior Show" as outlined by Rita C. McGoldrick in these departments of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

On Tuesday morning, March 29, the Carlton theatre, a key house of this important circuit, entertained 1500 teachers, Sisters, ministers and priests at a private showing of "Broken Lullaby." Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, addressed the audience and presented Mrs. Rita C. McGoldrick, who, he said, was "the pioneer among national leaders in the building up of community interest in the better things of the screen." Mr. Milliken pointed out the responsibiilty of the organized public to the theatre and urged the distinguished audience to lend its wholehearted support to the new undertaking that promised to make film history in Brooklyn.

Mrs. McGoldrick outlined the plan for Brooklyn's first Better Films Council, to be made up of the Motion Picture Chairmen of all local clubs and groups, and assured the executives representing the circuit that adequate support would be given to all endorsed pictures booked by any theatre in their circuit. She reminded the audience that this was a simpler task than it might seem on the surface, since 70 per cent of the entire product of the industry was endorsed by the various national reviewing groups during the past year.

The plan of "School and Screen" was adopted as a working basis by the managers and the Junior Show announced for the theatres.

This plan will go into active operation in the last week of April at the opening of "Boy's Week" when outlines offered by Rita C. McGoldrick in the last issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD will formally go into effect, with the pictures listed in the HERALD as suitable booked for these theatres. Boy Scouts will serve as ushers, a prominent public official will address the young people and a selected program of Scout pictures, with "Tom Sawyer" as the feature will make up the program.

In order to make this work definitely far-reaching in its effects for the community as well as the box office of the cooperating theatres, local club women have organized Brooklyn's first Better Films Council which will stand strongly behind this important new enterprise.

The Randforce Amusement Company is arranging for a trailer to be used at the performances where endorsed pictures are being shown.

A similar announcement of an attractive poster will be displayed in the lobby of each theatre.

Mr. Monty MacLevy, division superintendent, and Mr. George Langbart, manager of the Carlton theatre, are cooperating directly with Mrs. McGoldrick.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Phoenix, Ariz.

DEAR HERALD:

After one visits Phoenix and sees the country surrounding the town he wonders why they made the balance of the state. Phoenix claims a population of eighty thousand people (they claim enough) but whether they claim eighty thousand, more or less, doesn't lessen the importance of this desert town.

Surrounding Phoenix is quite a scope of valley country under irrigation where fruit and alfalfa is grown with much success and which is a big help to the balance of the state, since outside of the irrigated districts but little is grown except cactus and greasewood.

Arizona is said to have large deposits of minerals, which are one of the chief industries of the state. It also has large deposits of rocks, some of which were deposited on her highways and they haven't got 'em off yet, but at that it has rather good roads if you are not in too much of a hurry.

There are five theatres in Phoenix, all belonging to Publix, and considering the size of the town and the country around it, we would say that there are not too many to serve the public need. All of these houses were doing a fairly good business, when we visited them, taking into consideration present conditions. This is most likely due to the showmanship employed by the various local managers.

Those that we were able to call on were Mitchel Soloman of the Strand, J. J. Shaler of the Orpheum and L. P. Weaver of the Rialto, all of whom claimed to be delighted that we called, but then you never can tell about that, for we called on a girl once and she told us how delighted she was, and just then a horn honked out in the street in front of the house and she got up and excused herself and went out and went joyriding with a plumber, but, anyhow, they showed us a delightful time and we have placed their names on our visiting list, and if you knew how particular we are about our visiting list you would agree that these boys are all right.

We also met A. G. Pickett, who is publicity manager for this circuit of theatres, and what A. G. don't know about publicity hasn't been published yet. He never misses a chance to tell the dear people that Phoenix is the Mecca for the lovers of good entertainment and that the Paramount theatres have a corner on it, all of which the various managers proceed to prove, which puts A. G. in Jake with the public. If Phoenix was located in Nebraska just think what a town it would be, but Arizona couldn't spare Phoenix, for, outside of Tucson, Tombstone, Florence, Bisby, Douglas and Benson and a few towns up in the mountains, they wouldn't have much left except Casa Grande, Gila Bend and Yuma, and they're too darned hot. You will like Phoenix and you will like Tucson.

Gila Bend is on the Gila river, and that's where the Gila Monsters are found. But maybe you don't know what a Gila Monster is. It's a small short-legged animal about the size of a muskrat and has yellow stripes and when he grabs onto you he hangs on like a bulldog. When you go pestigating around that country don't go barefooted, for those Gila Monsters are very fond of toes. As between Gila Monsters and rattlesnakes we'll take huckleberry pie.

At Florence we met W. T. Gregg and also his wife. W. T. manages the Isis theatre, which is one of a chain of houses located east of Florence in the mountains. W. T. says business is bad (we have heard that expression before) and we don't doubt his statement, for it has been dependent to a considerable extent on the mines and they are operating on short time or closed entirely.

Tucson

Tucson is just about as it was when we were there two years ago, only it isn't quite so good, but it's a nice place to live from October 1st to May 1st. After that you want to go to the mountains, but that will be easy, for the Rincons and Catalinas are only a short distance away, and along about July the nearer they are the better.

Tucson has five theatres and that's aplenty—the Rialto, Opera House, Plaza, Lyric and Fox. The Rialto and Opera House are Publix theatres and are managed by Roy P. Drachman, and what we mean is MANAGED. There's a boy who knows how to manage a house. He has been at it so long that he doesn't know there are any other buildings on the street. His mind is on those theatres sixty minutes of every hour and twenty-four hours every day. His wife (if he has one) has to take his meals to him and he sleeps in the box office and dreams of such pictures as "Emma," "Delicious," and "Common Clay,"

G. A. Pratt operates the Fox and the Fox Plaza, both belonging to the Fox organization. Mr. Pratt was too busy to give us much of his time when we called. It was "Student Night" and the price of admission had been cut to 25 cents and boy, you ought to have seen that crowd; they were backed out on the street and Mr. Pratt was doing his best to hold the jam in check. We wonder if the cut in price had anything to do with it. If we were going to bet our dough on it we would place it on the affirmative, for be it known that everywhere we have gone the houses playing at reduced prices were doing the business, and let us drop this remark, whether it's good, bad or neither, that the day of the fifty cent show is gone, and if Hollywood continues to build pictures with the fifty cent idea in mind they will have to confine their sales to the spots where millionaires have more money than sense.

Mr. Rudulph of the RCA Photophone wanted us to call at the Plaza in Tucson and hear their sound installation. We did, and Mr. B. E. Grooms, the operator, told us all about it, and by the way, Mr. Grooms is a swell operator but is only working as a relief man at this time but wants a permanent position; somebody better write him. Mr. Grooms thinks the RCA is all right, and when he and Mr. Rudulph are agreed on a matter no further argument is necessary.

Consolidated Stockholders Re-elect Board of Directors

At the annual meeting of stockholders of Consolidated Film Industries, held late last week, retiring directors were re-elected, and H. J. Yates, president, announced that contracts were under negotiation with two "leading" producing companies who had not previously given their release printing to Consolidated. This, it is said, will add a large volume of business which can be handled in the company's new plants now concentrated at Consolidated Park, in Fort Lee, N. J.

Yates also said that, due to unfavorable weather and other conditions, recent production of new pictures had not been as large as usual, but as the demand for good pictures is as great as ever, plans of the major producing companies provide for a large number of new pictures to be made this summer.

Monogram To Release Six Features Made by Allied

Allied Productions, Inc., will produce six specials for the 1932-33 Monogram program, according to a deal completed between M. H. Hoffman, president of Allied, and W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram.

The tentative titles of the Hoffman specials are: "Streets of New York," "The Thirteenth Guest," "The Ape," "Big City Light," "Guilty or Not Guilty," "West of Singapore."

Wife of Percy Furber Dead

Funeral services were held at Darien, Conn., last Saturday, for Mrs. Cornelia Chapman Furber, wife of Percy M. Furber, president of the Trans-Lux Corporation. Mrs. Furber died of pneumonia contracted following injuries sustained in an automobile accident. Furber is the inventor of the Trans-Lux screen and rear projection.

Publix Groups Departments

Paramount-Publix has consolidated the purchasing, maintenance and sound projection departments under the direction of Eugene Zukor, for quicker and more efficient service in the field. Larry Flynn has been placed in charge of the transportation and traffic departments, recently consolidated.

Heath, Blair Join Livingston

Frank Heath, for the past eight years general casting director at Paramount's New York studio, and Harry Blair, formerly eastern studio representative for Film Daily, have joined Livingston's International Casting Directory, with headquarters in New York.

B.I.P. Unit Official Resigns

Stanley Whiteley, treasurer of B. I. P. America, American distributors for British International, has resigned. According to Arthur Dent, vice-president, the resignation is in accordance with an agreement made when Whiteley came to this country in 1930. Whiteley returns to London this week.

MGM Speeding Production

MGM is concluding its 1931-32 production schedule on the Coast with seven features currently in work and seven others in various stages of preparation.

WE DO SOME VISITING!

'S TOUGH to come back to cold, raining, grippey New York after some ten days of Miami's best brand of sunshine, golf and a beach that just makes you feel rejuvenated. (The Miamians have a better word for it.) But Mrs. Chick needed the sunshine and I felt that a little bit of it would do me no harm either.

Aside from the pleasure of meeting so many fine showmen, these little trips afford us a much needed opportunity to observe conditions in other parts of the country first hand and to note the difference in operation and show-selling methods. To keep these pages interesting for the greatest majority of our members and readers we find it helpful to know what is going on elsewhere.

SOMEHOW or other we've been doing some overtime thinking and finally arrived at the conclusion that the wholesale slashing of managers' salaries as a means of reducing overhead is a lot of plain, unadulterated bunk.

In the past three years we have watched this ridiculous horse-play going on and wondering—as well as hoping—when the "slashers" would get wise to themselves and realize the great harm they were doing to their organizations as well as their box office business.

A theatre costing in the negibhorhood of fifteen hundred dollars a week to operate and paying their manager around a hundred a week in salary will find that they are getting far more for that hundred dollars than any other item on the entire list of operating items.

A group of, say, ten theatres under a supervisor with a mistaken idea of values will set forth to cut expenses. Not being efficient enough to dope out ways and means of increasing receipts he must fall back on the slashing circus and forthwith he notifies his managers that they must take another small cut. The total saving realized through such a move will probably amount to less than seventy-five dollars a week for the whole ten houses. But he has automatically slashed somewhere in the vicinity of fifty per cent from the efficient operation of those theatres.

No human being on earth can put in the hours demanded of theatre managers and do it with a smile on short-rations pay. Creating selling ideas for mediocre product; watching the equipment of his theatre; and the hundred and one other important tasks falling on the manager's shoulders. Start to take away his already abbreviated salary and he is going to become indifferent somewhere along the line. It's human nature and he can't be blamed.

If the few dollars thus saved by theatre owners stand between them and bankruptcy, we suggest that they quit now and turn over their theatres to showmen with a far more keener appreciation for the manager's job.

WE were rather surprised to find a situation just a short way down South where an independent and a circuit house were bitterly engaged in some of the rottenest forms of throat-cutting. Without a question of doubt they were hurting each other and leaving a far from pleasant feeling in the minds of the people of that community.

For example, when one house had the edge by reason of a far superior picture, the other house would immediately start some form of mud-throwing and counter-campaign designed, not to help him get some business, but to stop the other theatre from doing too much.

Their methods were slightly off-color in many senses of the word and on the day we pulled into the town the house with the weaker picture spent a pile of jack for a splurge newspaper ad calling attention to the fact that the superior attraction would play there within two weeks at much lower prices. In addition, they handed out free tickets in front of the opposition to get the people from patronizing it.

Such tactics, we were informed by an obliging hotel clerk, were going on all the time, with neither one nor the other getting the money they should have been getting out of that town.

As near as we could judge, without much speculation, a clean sweeping broom was sadly needed to start things off on a more businesslike basis and we find it hard to understand why the circuit permitted their manager to continue such nonsense. One smart showman could go into that spot and put any dirt-slinging theatre out of business in six months.

Oh well, the cash customers were getting the breaks anyway. They rarely seemed to be buying tickets with all the free passes floating around.

BEFORE bringing this week's chat to a close we must express our appreciation to those Miamian showmen who made our visit down there so thoroughly enjoyable.

Sonny Shepherd, Hal Kopplin, Jack Fink, Harry Weiss, Joe Campbell, J. H. Luter, Howard Morris, and all the rest whom we will tell you more about in future issues. If you want to find some real enthusiasm for showbusiness, take a tip and start hitch-hiking for Miami where showmen are—showmen, and even in these times are proud of it.

MOSS AND PROCTOR PUTTING OVER HEAVY CAMPAIGNS ON COAST

It's been some time since we reported on activities of Richard "Dick" Moss, who for several months has been in charge of the United Artists Theatre, Los Angeles. However, he and his publicity director, Jack Proctor, have been on the job and have turned out some fine campaigns.

Several tie-ups featured work done on "Tonight or Never" and included a newspaper, a gown outfitting company, a chain store firm, Lux soap, a restaurant, and a style show which was staged by a famous designer on the Coast.

The newspaper tieup was made with the circulation department and through this medium 20,000 circulars were distributed at the Coliseum during an important athletic meet. One side of the herald carried the theatre newspaper ad and the other was used by the paper to plug their sports section.

The deal made with the chain stores consisted of imprinting 20,000 paper bags with one of the theatre's two-column, eight-inch newspaper ads and these were distributed from two of the main stores in the downtown section during run of picture. There was a sale on at that time in the notions department and the bags received wide distribution.

The tie-up with the soap company obtained displays in 250 grocery stores in the southern California district consisting of 11 by 17 window strips with photo of Miss Swanson and copy. All company trucks also carried banners with similar copy.

The style show resulted in heavy matinee trade and much favorable comment from feminine patrons. One of the leading furriers in the city furnished his wares for the occasion and paid entire costs, includng salaries of models and fee of stylist who staged the show. The fur shop also paid for several display ads in advance and on opening day.

Other effort included a tie-up with a restaurant for placing of stickers on all menus; a dozen or so extra windows in prominent downtown locations; 10 50-word radio announcements daily and paid for by the fur shop; use of 100 special block billboards, and excellent breaks in all newspapers. A special interview was obtained with the director of the picture.

The campaign on "Cock of the Air" included a tie-up with Shapiro-Bernstein, publishers of two numbers in the picture, which resulted in obtaining 10 fine window displays; a tie-up with Old Gold cigarettes, which secured window strips in all United Cigar stores in the city; a tie-up with Denley Airplane Lighter, which obtained more window strips in cigar stores; another tie-up with a restaurant for stickers on menus; a special show for 300 newsboys; enlarged stills of Billie Dove on outfitting store windows, and same kind of deals made with newspaper and radio as mentioned in preceding paragraphs. Billboards and newspapers were employed as usual.

A most effective and far-reaching campaign was conducted in connection with "Around the World in 80 Minutes," including a preview for 2,500 members of the Coast Geographic Society; a boy scout tie-up; Philippine and Japanese Nights; a tie-up with Camel cigarettes (on account of reference made to Camels in dialogue), a preview for the P. T. Association: insertion of small ads in foreign newspapers; a plug in libraries with 40,000 bookmarks; radio and classified page tie-ups; tooth-paste tie-up with drug stores, using photo showing Fairbanks' white teeth; a special letter to all Women's Clubs, and other ties with a steamship line and department stores.

The above will give Dick Moss' old friends an idea of the scope of the campaigns he and Proctor are putting over in Los Angeles. To our way of thinking, both these showmen are covering considerable ground and we don't doubt for one minute that the good work was reflected at the box office in the form of excellent business. Now that we've started the ball a-rolling again, Dick, let's hear more from you on special stunts, etc. Till then, so long.

ONE ENEMY? TOO MANY!

Paramount's campaign book on "The Miracle Man" offers the following sensible advice. Managers should keep it in mind not alone for "The Miracle Man" but for any other picture they play:

Don't belittle anybody, don't offend anybody, don't bring into relief any aggravated afflictions in publicity, ads or ballyhoo on this picture.

Don't make a street ballyhoo out of a man on crutches.

Don't use any "beware of pickpockets" teaser banners in your lobby; that's an unnecessary scare.

Don't throw mud at any religious sect or faith healers; don't even dwell too heavily on the beggar angle, there may be one deserving exception in any racket.

MANUEL EFFECTED A TIE-UP WITH TAXIS FOR AN AUTO PARADE

Along with his application for membership in this organization a few weeks ago came a little snapshot of a bally arranged for "Taxi" by J. E. "Johnny" Manuel, manager of the Ohio Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, which we are reproducing herewith.

A parade of six bannered taxi-cabs, such as the one you see in the photo, was preceded by a police escort on motorcycles. Incidentally, the cab company paid half the cost on distribution of 5,000 trick heralds.

Manuel has been a full-fledged theatre manager for about five months at this writing, having worked up to his present position through the grades of usher, service chief and assistant. He's located out among a hard-hitting division of showmen and we'll hope to receive many other interesting contributions from this new member.

MORROW PUT OVER NEAT CAMPAIGN ON JOE BROWN PICTURE

Highlights in a campaign put over on "Fireman Save My Child" by Floyd D. Morrow, manager of the Kenosha Theatre, Kenosha, Wis., included a novel stage presentation; an attractively decorated lobby and foyer; radio broadcast; street bally, and well handled advertising and publicity in local newspapers.

For one week in advance small cut-outs of Joe Brown were used in the foyer, peeping out from under lobby furniture, around staircases, in the ladies' room, etc. Some of these comic cut-outs are shown grouped in the strip of photos on this page, as will as the larger cut-out. Another advance display consisted of an ancient hand-drawn pump engine, an old hose cart and four framed pictures of old volunteer fire days.

Bread
JOE E. BROWN
KENOSHA

The radio was also effectively used in advance with the following sketch: Fire siren; (woman's voice) "Help! Help! Fireman, Save My Child!" (Bass voice) "Be Brave! Be Brave! My Fair Lady, Joe E. Brown is on his way to save you and he never fails a lady in distress." (Announcer) "And he never fails any of us when it comes to giving us real hearty laughs and wholesome screen entertainment. Be sure to see him in 'Fireman, Save My Child' at Warner's Kenosha Theatre next........., etc., etc." (Fire siren.)

For one week in advance and preceding trailer the stage was darkened and the screen curtain closed. From the left came a woman's scream, "Help, Help—save my child." Then a red spot from the booth caught a comic life size cut-out of a woman with baby in her arms (see photo). A Joe Brown Yell at the right, "Ee-ow-ee." The spot then changed to white and caught a comic cut-out of Brown posed in the act of running. This cut-out (see photo) was mounted on a sliding platform and pulled across the stage, followed by spot. When the cutouts met lights were darkened and a woman's voice called, "Oh, Mr. Brown." Then the trailer hit the screen.

That old pumper shown in the accompanying photo was taken out of the lobby on the Saturday before opening and used on the streets for a bally. It was drawn by a bannered truck equipped with a fire siren. When the bally was halted at intersections, throwaways promoted by a tie-up with Beechnut were handed out. Sample chocolate drops were attached to cards that carried appropriate copy on the picture.

Cut-Out Displays

Other effort included cut-out displays in various windows; use of cut-outs of Brown and of woman holding child on marquee with spotlights trained on them; lobby display of old fire equipment, and the designation of Monday night as "Volunteer Night," when special invitations were extended to all living members of the old volunteer fire department. The invitations were in the form of letters, stating that a section had been especially reserved for the occasion.

All of which goes to show that Floyd Morrow put over a neat campaign which must have brought satisfactory returns to the box office. His little stage presentation gag is one that can easily be put on by the average theatre and should prove an effective advance gag. Morrow is another entrant in the current contest for cash and other honors on this picture and we wish him the same brand of luck as we've passed on to the other boys.

KANSAS CITY HOUSE USED NOVELTY PASS TO EXPLOIT A FILM

When exploiting "Union Depot" at the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, L. Sobler, of the First National-Publix Dubinsky Brothers forces out in that city, used a pass such as illustrated here. It measures about eight inches long by three and one-half inches wide and was made up in the form of a railroad ticket.

A regulation railroad ticket was used as a container, with copy as follows: Name ——; Train Leaves; 'Union Depot'; Ticket Fare, Complimentary; Pullman, Seats Free; Date ——; Time 11.30 P. M.; Place, Newman Theatre. The copy on the ticket is equally attractive and we hope interested members will be able to make it out.

The above came to us from the Home Office here in New York and our records fail to disclose a card on Sobler. It was a neat little gag, to our way of thinking, and we'd like to see further examples of his work.

TOM KANE INTRIGUED HIS PATRONS WITH A VAUDE-STYLE HERALD

A trick herald and a calling card gag were effectively used a short time ago on two shows by Tom Kane, manager of the Sequoia Theatre, Redwood City, Calif.

We are showing a small reproduction of the herald that was the means of doubling the usual Sunday business, and the trick was all in the way the different numbers were grouped. Note that it was done in vaudeville style, with the feature topping the bill and the shorts arranged as following "acts." Tom states it brought them out like nobody's business.

His calling card gag was built on the catchline, "Make a Date with Emma," with the telephone number of the theatre pay station in the lower left hand corner. The cards were distributed by a selected group of boy and girl students in school lockers, desks and pockets of clothing at the school and, believe it or not, Tom says, that telephone bell did a lot of ringing, presumably from "young sprouts." The pay station number was not listed in the 'phone book, hence there wasn't any way for them to check it. The gag was further publicized with High School newspaper display and teaser ads carrying the same copy. Heads of local service clubs were prevailed upon to use the cards at their stag meetings and members were told with straight face that there was a new "Dame" opening up in town and solicited their patronage. It caught on and caused a lot of laughs.

As a result of the above the picture played to the biggest bargain matinee (25 cents) that the house had seen in a long time, despite the fact that a town only five miles away had played ahead for a four-day run.

Which all goes to show that Kane is still batting them out in his usual aggressive style. Keep it up, Tom, and don't forget your Club in the future.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

WALTER HUSTON
AND
HE DEFIED THE CRIMINAL CODE — AND PAID ! — HE DEFIED THE MORAL CODE AND SUFFERED!

Above is another example of the poster art work being turned out by Erling Espedal, poster artist with D. & R. Theatres, Aberdeen, Wash.

This time he picked Walter Huston for his subject and the result was a striking piece of work. Note the effective contrast of lettering at the left of portrait and expression brought out in the latter.

Next time we present some of Espedal's work we'll show what he did on "Charlie Chan's Chance" and "Good Sport". We have two at hand, one on Warner Oland and the other on Linda Watkins.

O. T. Taylor, manager of D. & R. Theatres, informs us that the poster end of this department is proving a decided stimulant to publicity and art staffs. Let's hope that other poster men will take this showman at his word and send along examples of their craft.

CLASSIFIED TIE-UP HANDLED BY GROVE IN DIFFERENT WAY

Herewith are a couple of samples of tie-up ads put into effect by H. D. Grove, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Davenport, Iowa, through a deal made with the classified department of a leading newspaper in this city.

Most of our readers are familiar with the gag of sprinkling names of local residents through the classified columns, with a display box on the same page calling attention to free tickets to the current show at the theatre. Letters instead of names were used in this case and guest tickets were given those who formed them into a sentence pertaining to the picture. Originality and uniqueness of answers, in addition to correctness, were taken into consideration.

The attractive ads that you see here were also handled differently on this occasion. Instead of running them solely on classified pages, the ads were spotted in other parts of the paper where they received an excellent break. Note that both ads illustrated here carry cuts of stars and generous mention of title, players, theatre and play-dates.

A PLAN TO REVIVE LOCAL TRADE WITHOUT COST TO THEATRE!

By JACK JACKSON

Publix-Penn Division

Constantly alive to the great necessity of stimulating business, Jack Jackson, of the Publix-Penn Division, worked out this plan through a special bulletin and it is now being worked in many of the towns covered by that division.

Showmen in other parts of the country will no doubt jump at the opportunity to do likewise in their own communities, and we consider the basic idea behind this suggestion sufficiently worth-while to recommend it to all of you.

Slight deletions had to be made due to postal laws, but there is enough "meat" here to start you off towards working the idea out successfully. Those who do so are urged to send us a photo of the truck used as well as any other information they may have on how it was worked in their towns.

Here Is a Suggestion from a Seasoned Showman as to Application of a Practical Stunt for Store and Theatre

THE alarming decline in theatre patronage this year as compared to last, has caused a tremendous amount of conjecture and calculation. Better pictures, added attractions, finer service and improved facilities and equipment have all failed to attract customers in numbers comparable with last year's programs of poorer quality. The final analysis of investigation leads to the irrefutable conclusion that shrinking payrolls, unemployment, hoarding and other factors of the present economic depression are responsible for the absence of the faces of former regular customers at the box office.

The further conclusion follows that if this is the situation that confronts theatre managers it is also the stumbling block that stands in the way of profits for every merchant in your community. Properly approached these merchants will be every bit as interested in the possible solution to this baffling situation as yourself and it is with this thought dominating that the following plan is offered as providing maximum possibilities of recruiting new patrons to fill the depleted ranks of the old regular customers.

You'll Find This True!

As an example, let us conclude for the purpose of rapid calculation, that where three customers presented themselves at your box office and at the counters of merchants last year only two are in evidence today. In other words, one-third of the purchasing power of your community has been wiped out. However, it is reasonable to assume that 10% or more of the remaining two-thirds represents persons of major incomes who are independent of fluctuating finance.

This same example is true of the outlying neighborhoods and the smaller surrounding communities that naturally look to your city as a shopping center and, the psychological thought follows, that the 10% not affected by the depression in these neighborhoods and small outlying communities are following the path of least resistance and accepting the procedure of the majority of people in the neighborhoods and communities in which they reside. This fortunate 10%, or moneyed class, offers a potential field of solicitation that, forcibly and intelligently applied, offers great possibilities of filling the depleted ranks of regular purchasers in your town.

The above preamble is incorporated in this article for the purpose of providing you with sufficient logic and facts to stimulate a stndy of your own community and enable you to perfect a sales approach that will influence the merchants in cooperating with your theatre to the extent of defraying the cost of forcible sales appeal to be exerted in these neighborhoods and communities.

Undoubtedly there are many plans of accomplishing this, but, after much conversation with managers and District Managers, we are listing here a plan that seems the least expensive and promises the greatest possibilities of intriguing the possible patronage of neighborhoods and outlying communities.

Bargain Ghost Car

Secure the services of one of the many idle persons in your community that own automobiles—salary not to exceed $25.000 a week for gas, oil, car and driver. The driver of this car should be a lusty-lunged individual capable of emanating the methods of the old-time "town cryer." The use of megaphone is also recommended.

An overall frame should be built around the car, which in turn should be covered entirely with white muslin or other acceptable material —do not use sign cloth. Narrow slits, of sufficient dimensions to allow visibility for the driver and to prevent the possibility of accident, are to be cut in front of the material and on either side. These slits should be outlined in black so as to leave the impression of a black streak and enhance the illusion that the car is spectral.

On the front, back and either side above the fender level bold black letters are to appear reading: "———— (Name of your town) Bargain Ghost Car." In smaller letters run the phrase, "How many miles will it travel this week? Send your guess to ——— (Your theatre name)."

Completely encircling the car, to a point as high as the fender level, attach a box frame to carry the ads of participating merchants. Four merchants, one in front, one back and one at either side, should provide sufficient revenue to defray the entire cost of this ballyhoo. Two 2x4's attached, one each to the front and back fenders and reaching to a point above the roof of the car, will provide a space for a long banner lettered on either side calling attention to the attraction at your theatre, prices, etc.

Attention-compelling noise-makers—three or four cowbells attached to a rope, a phonograph, a siren horn or other devices calculated to draw attention to this car at all times, must be part of the equipment. These must be of a nature that will allow the driver to control the devices so that they conform to the city or country ordinance where the car might be used.

If Your Trade Is Off, the Same Condition Exists Among Your Merchant Friends; Put Your Heads Together and Work

Each morning the cooperating merchant will advise you of a "leader" article or sale that he wants ballyhooed through the megaphone throughout the outlying towns and it will be the duty of the driver of the car to halt, at factories, small business districts, etc., and cry through the megaphone from inside the car the message of the various merchants—also that of your theatre. This ballyhoo sales address should be changed daily and the driver to be instructed as to the length of time he should stop at each given spot—I recommend not more than five minutes. Write each address personally for the driver to read at all stops.

The driver should also be supplied with a route list each day to insure intelligent coverage of the communities you wish to canvass. I would recommend that the hours 9 to 11 A. M. be devoted to the outlying neighborhoods with the cowbells jangling, phonograph playing, siren blowing, so as to attract the attention of housewives who contemplate an afternoon of shopping. During the period 11 to 1:30 P. M., the car should be around factories and in rural communities. A rural canvass should also be conducted from 1:30 until 3:30 P. M., when the car would return to the neighborhoods to again attract the attention of housewives, school children, etc.

Good for Several Weeks!

The plan should be entered into on a basis of two to four week periods, preferably four, and the merchants contacted be approached for participation over the entire period. The entire cost of driver, cover-all and signs should be divided among participating merchants and on the basis outlined this cost will not run more than $1.10 per day or $6.60 per week, per merchant. On this basis $5.60 would be left over the actual driver's charge to care for the cost of material used for signs, covers, etc.

I do not believe there is a single merchant in your community who will not recognize in this plan a minimum cost opportunity of thorough, forcible coverage together with a novel presentation of his merchandise as well as forceful appeal for patronage to communities he cannot reach at any figure even closely approximating this total expense.

When the novelty of this activity has worn off there are many other unusual avenues of sales approach that can be perfected by yourself to reach the financially independent people of outlying districts and encourage attendance at your theatre and the counters of your merchants. Get busy—have a new one ready when this becomes ineffective.

Showmen who have worked out similar ideas to stimulate business for the local merchants as well as themselves should consider it their duty to send us complete details. Only through a merging of ideas on these pages from all over the country can the largest majority of us reap the full benefit of this great medium for the interchanging of ideas. To successfully engineer any business building thought and then keep it to yourself when your brother managers are so badly in need of help is the height of selfishness. "Give and Take" always, but never take without giving.

Many showmen today possess extraordinary ability to promote tie-ups of the kind which produce large and beneficial results to all participating. Since your own ideas are generally tried out in your own community you naturally get the first advantage in successfully bringing them to a head. But afterwards you ought to remember that other managers, not as clever as yourself, might be able to crawl out of the red for a while by reason of your suggestions. Would you deny them the opportunity? We think not. Come through and tell us how to keep out of the red.

Keeping Up With The Times!

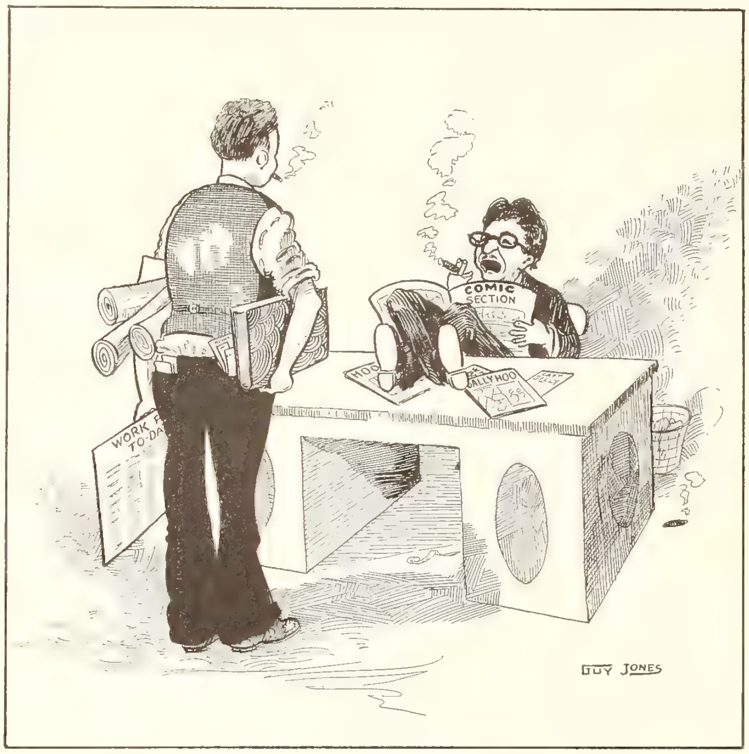
By GUY JONES



Apparently "sitting positions" pay well and provide plenty of time for careful perusal of "bathroom" literature. Here we find the big boss in an executive pose while listening to one of his house manager's request for a slight salary increase. To which the boss replies that said manager is premature in making such a request since he has only been with the company for two years. So well?

HERE'S A SPLENDID BUSINESS BOOSTING PLAN FROM TOM WEAR

Circuit theatre managers and groups of theatre owners or managers should be interested in a combination good will building and money-getting plan recently put over by T. H. Wear, Jr., who is doing exploitation and publicity work for the William Smalley Chain of Theatres, Cooperstown, N. Y.

Briefly, the plan consists of contacting the heads of all schools situated in the circuit's district and selling them on the idea of having each school, high-school or otherwise, produce a one-act play to be shown at the circuit theatre on a designated night, preferably a night on which some boosting of this sort would be in order. The schools supply talent, costumes and whatever sets necessary for the production. The act in this case was timed for not less than 20 minutes and not more than 40.

The judges of the acts are to be selected by the circuit owner or manager and in Wear's campaign first, second and third prizes of $50, $25 and $15 were offered for the best productions. Special tickets may be sold by the schools if they so wish, the theatre agreeing to rebate the students 20 per cent to be used against a fund to defray production expenses. The awards are to be spent by the principal in a way agreeable to the cast. High school students first present their play and the rest follow in order. A time limit is set for presentations. All of the above is set forth in the form of a contract and space is reserved below for signatures of both parties.

When selling the above idea to a large group of schools in upper New York State. Wear above all things made it appear that it was essentially a good-will gesture on the part of Smalley Theatres and not in any way a money maker. Keep that thought uppermost, he advises, and they may even put your name down among prospects for a tablet some day. Friday nights were selected in most instances for the presentations, with dress rehearsal Friday afternoons. The players were promised that the judges would not be present at the rehearsals, but that audience would be furnished for them to work to.

It is also advisable to have a first-run clause and protection in the contract, keeping booking dates intact or left only to the discretion of the theatre manager, so that dates cannot be changed around. Feature pictures played in connection with the nights could be one or more of those that have been shelved for just such an occasion.

A smart manager will immediately sense many selling angles in connection with a stunt of this kind. The work doesn't necessarily have to be confined to a territory embraced by any one circuit, 'though Smalley's towns, consisting of populations ranging from 3,000 to 25,000, appear to have been particularly adaptable to promotion of such a scheme. It is also possible for a group of independent theatre owners in nearby towns to get together on a deal of this kind. Whether or not the scheme could be worked in the public schools of the larger cities would depend entirely upon how the school authorities reacted.

Results proved the feasibility of the plan in a territory such as Wear's. The stunt proved a great attraction; citizens were pleased when called on to act as judges; students had a great opportunity to exercise their dramatic talent; school authorities were well satisfied, and last, but not least, the good old box office register played a merry tune.

If any other Round Tablers try out the above plan we'd like to hear how it turns out, for to our way of thinking it appears to be a bang-up stunt. If it isn't all clear, let us know, for we've a couple of the original contracts for use between theatre and school and will gladly pass them along. Thanks to Tom Wear for making all this possible.

JULIA SMITH USED NOVEL TIE-UP WHEN SELLING "FIREMAN"

Hundreds of letters have been received by Julia M. Smith, manager of the State Theatre, Waterbury, Conn., in response to a novel tie-up she arranged in connection with "Fireman Save My Child."

A tear sheet of the front page of the second section of a Waterbury newspaper shows two two-column photos of fires that occurred in the town some time ago. The gag was to give a correct description of the fire and win a first prize of $5 or a second prize of one of 10 pairs of guest tickets for the picture.

As far as we are concerned, this goes down on the list as one of the original ideas on this picture and we're much obliged to Miss Smith for passing it along. If she will give us her complete campaign we will also be glad to include her name among the entrants for honors in the current contest.

NEWSPAPER PLAYED BIG PART IN GOOD WORK OF KNUDSEN'S

The newspaper end of the campaign made on "Fireman, Save My Child" by Harold S. Knudsen, director of publicity and exploitation for RKO theatres in Madison, Wis., appears to have overshadowed all other angles to a large extent, despite the fact that several tie-ups and ballys played important parts. But the newspapers certainly came through with a corking variety of stories and a splendidly worked-up cooperative ad page.

The above was largely due to a tie-up made with the paper for a Firemen's Popularity Contest, which was conducted along the same lines as any other popularity scheme. Ballots were carried in the paper from day to day one week in advance and citizens were asked to cast votes for their favorite fireman. More than $70 in cash and merchandise was promoted from merchants for the contenders. In addition to a wealth of day-to-day publicity relative to how the contest was progressing, the picture received over 120 inches of editorial space. At the close of the contest it published a three-column photo of the most popular members.

HOW TO ADVERTISE!

Some time ago a group of New York State merchants wanted to know this much discussed question, "What type of advertising attracts you most?" So they sent out a questionnaire. Here's what they found from 221 replies:

|---|---|
| Newspaper advertising | 173 |
| Window display | 86 |
| Friends' opinions | 45 |
| Circular letters | 10 |
| Mail order catalog | 8 |
| Handbills | 4 |

That co-op of Knudsen's is a knockout as far as we're concerned and to our knowledge the first of its kind that has reached this desk. Just get an eye-full of the display and general scheme of layout. Telephone numbers all set for the convenience of the readers. And copy worded so that if any one of the ads strike a sympathetic chord everything is ready for the reader to go ahead and call the number. That's clever advertising, to our way of thinking, and here's a hand to the man directly responsible for turning it out.

Among the tie-ups an outstanding one was arranged with a large department store for a Saturday party for local Boy Scouts and members of the Sky Climbers' Club. The store published two large ads in the newspaper calling attention to the offer of a guest ticket for every boy who made a purchase of a dollar or more on Friday and until Saturday noon. The cut on this page will show that the theatre received a good break in the ad. The other small cut shows a sample of newspaper display advertising carried out by the theatre. Still another advertising tie-up was effected between theatre and the local Fisk Tire agency, whereby a humorously worded ad featured a photo of Joe E. Brown. Samples of wall paper, carrying copy on picture, were also used for throw-aways as the result of a tie-up made with a local concern.

On Capitol Square 22-24 North Carroll Street

Radio broadcasts a street bally and an attractively decorated lobby also contributed effectively to the campaign. Broadcasts were made daily one week in advance and cost of air time was absorbed through having two RKO artists assist at the 'mike." The bally consisted of a comic fireman engaged with distribution of the wall paper throwaways mentioned in a preceding paragraph.

If newspaper publicity will put a picture over, and many hold that it is the heart and backbone of any campaign, then there can be no doubt that box office figures at the Capitol were right where they should be during run of this picture. So far in the contest that Warner-First National is running for exploitation honors on this film, we have had occasion to weigh results produced by a Fireman's Popularity contest and it's altogether evident that these have brought home the bacon as far as newspaper publicity is concerned. Good luck to you, Knudsen, in your bid for one of the awards, and let's hear from you again soon.

HUDSON USED NOVEL SLANT TO PROMOTE CO-OPERATIVE PAGE

A slightly different twist was given to the promotion of a co-operative ad by V. E. Hudson, manager of the Palace Theatre, Lockport, N. Y., different in that it meant a revival of merchants' faith in the value of advertising and that a novel twist otherwise than some puzzle gag was injected to stimulate interest.

Local merchants had been cold to ad solicitation and tie-ups for some time prior to being approached by Hudson for a page on "Emma," due mainly to curtailment of overhead in view of existing conditions.

He explained that he was preparing 14-inch flittered letters spelling the words, "Marie Dressler in Emma," and that it was his idea to place one letter in the store window of each non-competitive merchant who participated in the tie-up. The first 10 window shoppers, or otherwise, who visited all the stores and assembled the different letters into the proper words became entitled to a pair of guest tickets for the show.

To make a long story short, the merchants fell for the idea and supported the co-op, a reproduction of which we are showing on this page. In addition to generous space at the top of the page, you will note that the attraction and theatre received a great break in the center portion.

Much has been written in this department about co-op selling methods and advantages of same to both merchant and theatre man. The general practice of getting up such a page or pages has usually been accomplished through a thought on the part of the theatre man and leg work on the part of the newspaper advertising representative. Therefore, when the work is done in a different manner, such as described above, it becomes our duty to pass along information to Hudson's fellow Club members.

In this case, the deal also accomplished the double purpose of promoting interest in the coming attraction and bringing about a renewal of faith on the part of the merchant as regards advertising. So maybe Hudson's tip will serve as a reminder to others to try something new when lack of interest is shown on the subject of co-operative ads.

STAGE THAT FASHION SHOW!

Here Is Some Additional Dope To Augment First Article Which Appeared in Issue of March 5th

IN the original Fashion Show article in the issue of March 5, we tried to point the way from start to finish so that you could follow it easily and achieve the best possible results. Read that article through carefully and then keep this additional material before you so as to guide yourself the proper way. It is a simple task to lay out the plan you want to use by revamping the original layout to suit your own individual situation and the conditions existing in your town or city.

Get your newspaper advertising manager and editor behind the idea by impressing upon them the great interest that can be directed toward selling and buying of new spring merchandise. They will quickly grasp at the chance to get behind it with you since they have plenty to gain by so doing. Here and there some showmen have informed us that their newspaper crowd are too hard-boiled to fall for such a Show. Our only answer is that the fault lies with the showmen and not the newspapers.

The Chamber of Commerce is another good angle to capitalize on. They may undertake to line up every merchant in the town and make it a week's gala affair. Special editions and sections can be sponsored through them and the entire town dressed up for the week. This is far from an impossibility as many a showman can tell you. Such forms of activity are sorely needed right now and your Chamber of Commerce will admit it to you.

CAREFULLY thought over, you will soon begin to agree that you, as the theatre man, have the most to gain by reason of one of these great gala weeks or shows. Your cost is far less than any of the others involved—providing you know your business and can promote—but you are almost certain to pack your house every night and a goodly crowd for the afternoon shows.

If by any reason your copy of the issue of March 5 has been lost or misplaced, drop us a line immediately and we will send you a reprint of the original Fashion Revue article which covers this idea completely. Do this now as only a limited number of these reprints are available.

Following up the story of a few weeks back on how to stage a Fashion Show and Revue, we are reproducing from last year's Club pages some examples of newspaper advertising and merchant ads that were successfully used by showmen who put these shows over.

THE group to the right shows not only some of the valuable publicity secured by Tommy Kane for the Sequoia Theatre in Redwood City, Cal., but also some of the ads paid for by participating merchants. From observation we should judge that Tommy sold his various merchants some clean bills of goods.

Our purpose in bringing this material to your attention is to further emphasize the great possibilities of this fine box office sell-out. Especially will this be found true this year when the public seems to be rather slow at buying their new spring clothes. No merchants, no matter how dense his sense of advertising or showmanship may be, can possibly overlook the attention he can focus on his merchandise through the medium of one of these Fashion Shows, and if you, as the town's leading theatre manager, merely show him the way he will gladly follow.

You are not restricted to just those shops selling women's clothes. You can make your show cover a wire range of apparel by including the latest in negligee, stockings, shoes, hats and other accessories to milady's wardrobe. In this way you stand to benefit far more than through the old-fashioned one-shop tie-up. Don't work it that way any more. Get a half dozen of your town's best merchants behind this idea.

Probably more theatres this year than ever before are going in for the Fashion Show and Revue idea simply because they recognize in such a medium a grand opportunity to stimulate business through one of the most legitimate cooperative campaigns available for theatres of all sizes. Those who may have looked upon the idea as impractical for their particular house without going deeply into its many advantageous slants can still remedy such a wrong and premature thought and line up a great box office bet that in many cases will help boster up business just about the time when the first warm weather starts to eat into your attendance.

Nothing we can think of is as certain to bring them to your theatre as one of the Fashion Shows. Just ask some of your women patrons and get their reaction if you still harbor any doubts.

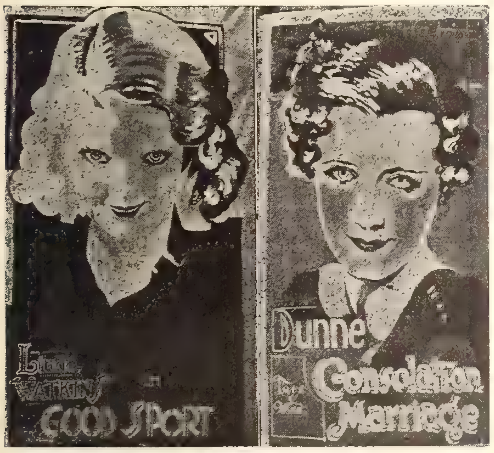
JAMES BITTLES HAS SOME POSTER IDEAS; MADE NEWS-REEL TIE

Interested in the examples of poster art work which we have submitted to our readers from time to time, James G. Bittles, manager of the Granada Theatre, Greencastle, Ind., informs us that he and his staff also do a bit of this sort of work themselves, and further discloses that they employ a system of using an ordinary projector and newsprint paper in order to keep down cost. Alabastine art colors are used to create the desired effects. When the finished article is fastened over a piece of wall board and put into a lighted frame, Bittles has found that it gives the effect of a much more elaborate piece of work with practically no expense for material.

We are reproducing a small photo of two snaps of posters recently turned out, from which you will all be able to form an idea of how attractive posters may be made with this method. Some time ago, he claims, a poster designed by Albert Howard was sent in to Club headquarters, but for the life of us we've never been able to locate it. If another arrives we'll do our level best to pass along complete information.



That it pays to keep a wide open eye on news reel subjects is seen in a move made by Bittles to capitalize on the appearance of the president of the Western Union in a recent number. The subject was a talk by the president on a new device for transmission of telegrams. The local telegraph manager was contacted and fifteen of the largest users of wire service were invited to witness the newsreel and entire program. Needless to state the messages were sent free of charge and the branch manager even allowed a plug for the feature.

Often there's a subject in a news reel that will lend itself to exploitation of this kind and we can see that Bittles is not overlooking any bets. We'll be on watch for other examples of this member's work in the future and hope that he and all the Vonderschmitt Amusement men will join the active list of this organization.

Versatile Jameyson

Howard E. Jameyson, advertising director for Fox-Midwest theatres, can perform other than making up show-selling ads.

Reliable authority informs us that he is constantly in demand as a speaker on motion pictures and visual education before church, school and civic bodies. Recent activities in this direction have taken him into several towns adjacent to Kansas City.

GRAB THESE LETTERS QUICK!

Strolling into Woolworth's the other day we found they were selling cut out wooden letters measuring 2½ inches high, by approx. 1½ in. wide by a half inch thick. They are perfect for making your own cutout-letter displays and can be used over and over again. Soft wood makes it possible to use thin wire nails without cracking or splitting.

And what do you think they cost? ONE CENT EACH.

Take the tip and hustle round to your local five-and-ten and get yourself a couple of dollars worth of these letters. They can be used for a hundred different purposes and are cheap enough to make their use general.

Spotted along the top of your inside lobby frames they can call attention to the play dates or stars or other plugs. Make your own inexpensive displays by pasting the outline of a one or three sheet on cheap compo board and use these letters for the text. Paint them a gold, silver or tinsel effect.

We could give you dozens of different slants on the possibilities of these letters but you'll be better able to dope them out for yourself. Just grab some of these letters and put them to use.

PREVIEW INSPIRED GARDNER'S CAMPAIGN IN SMALL COMMUNITY

What can be done in the matter of exploiting a picture for a small theatre in a small community was ably demonstrated not long ago by Allen E. Gardner, manager of the Granada Theatre, Stuart, Neb.

Gardner happened to be in Omaha when the Seth Parker picture, "Way Back Home," held its premiere, and was so impressed with its importance as crackerjack fare for the small town that he determined to use some other means to sell the film than ordinary procedure.

He contacted the minister of a local church and with his help organized a "Seth Parker Club" in the choir. It became the talk of the community and soon "Way Back Home" was the talk of the town. The club also stirred up a lot of extra enthusiasm among the members of the choir, according to a statement made by the minister, for to this day they still meet under the original name and rehearsals are carried out with promptness and a new spirit.

Next he conducted a drawing contest among school children up to and including the eighth grade. A picture of "Seth" was the subject and five guest tickets were offered as first award, three for second and one for third. This was done one week prior to showing and was the means of obtaining a lot more publicity.

On opening day of picture, through cooperation of the public school superintendent and heads of the Catholic institutions, it was arranged to dismiss classes in time for students to witness the matinee, at which were announced the winners of the drawing contest. Gardner states that this was the greatest matinee he ever held and it is taken for granted that the children told their parents all about the picture when they returned home.

For a ballyhoo he had a man dressed in Seth Parker make-up drive a horse and buggy up and down the streets between the hours of five and six o'clock in the evening. Signs on either side stated that it was the rig used by Parker in "Way Back Home," now playing at the Granada. This stunt also received its share of attention. Three-sheet cutouts of Parker on the sides of Gardner's own car and some throwaways rounded out the campaign. The picture played to three days of extra fine business.

Gardner's efforts are apt to put to shame some of the boys in the small houses who hold the opinion that it is not worth while to spend time exploiting pictures. Just as he states, stunts cannot be overdone in a small community, but every now and then a picture comes along that is admirably suited for small town exploitation and Gardner's advice to those similarly situated is to get behind this one and give it the works. His work accomplished results that he believes have never been duplicated for a three days' showing in a town the size of Stuart.

FAREWELL, DAVE!

It is with deep regret that we announce the accidental death of David J. Nolan, Rochester city manager for Loew's.

Nolan, in company with Frank Smith, manager of the Eastman Theatre, Bob Murphy, master of ceremonies at Loew's, and Eddie Hitchcock, exploitation representative for United Artists, were all returning late at night from a Stage Hands ball in Buffalo. An accident followed and Nolan was killed. The others were slightly injured but able to continue on their way after the accident.

Dave Nolan was one of the best known managers upstate and had been with Loew's for many years. His ability as a showman was without question and his sudden and untimely passing leaves his many friends stunned.

He joined the Managers' Round Table Club in October, 1930, and was one of our most interested members. We extend our condolences to his family.

SMITH BOOSTED TWO SERIALS THROUGH A TIE WITH MERCHANTS

A neat little merchant tie-up recently put across by Lou Smith, manager of the Elton Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., materially aided the box-office on the current serial and aroused interest in a forthcoming attraction.

He arranged with a storekeper, in this case a confectionery shop near the theatre, for the printing of 5,000 cards bearing punch marks for the twelve episodes of the serial. One side of the card carried instructions for punching and ad of theatre, picture and playdates, and the other side was devoted to ad for store. It was stated that when all marks were punched the holder would be entitled to see the first chapter of a succeeding serial free of charge. The cards and a Rin-Tin-Tin button were given out with all ten cent purchases of merchandise.

Another little costless gag of Lou's that helped bring in patronage on his serials and he's passing it along for the benefit of others in this organization. He continues to demonstrate that merchants in neighborhoods of the big city can be interested in deals of this nature and that's something of a feather in his cap. We'll have some further details of his activities in future issues.

GARRY LASSMAN IS STILL HITTING BALL UP IN TROY THEATRE

The business of selling shows is still flourishing up in the city of Troy, N. Y., where Garry Lassman manages the Lincoln Theatre, according to some evidence at hand concerning campaigns made on "Flying High," "Safe in Hell," "Stepping Sisters" and "Sooky."

For "Flying High" Lassman made a tie-up with a Bubble Gum company of Philadelphia for the give-away of toy gliders to the kiddies and made a deal with a local newspaper on a high-flying stunt that netted him valuable free space for some free tickets. Readers were asked to answer a list of questions pertaining to aviators and flights. Music stores were also tied up for displays of song hits in the picture and a personal friend plugged the songs over the local radio station.

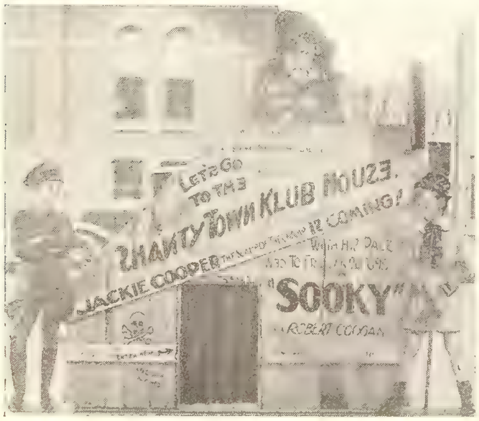
S

Prior to showing "Safe in Hell" he had a teaser ad campaign in the local paper and later used the same ads that were used by the Warner publicity department in New York City, which he found to be very effective. Five thousand heralds were distributed from house to house and the theatre marquee was dressed entirely with red bulbs.

One of the photos on this page shows a scale that Lassman had placed in front of the theatre entrance. A card called attention to free admission to any person who weighs over 225 pounds. This gag tied in nicely with the picture because of the story about the three burlesque "queens." The scale was attended by a uniformed usher and attracted its share of attention. Other efforts on this picture included distribution of 5,000 throwaways from house to house and use of a "Laugh Insurance Policy." The latter was tied in with a local insurance agency and was printed gratis by the company. It was made up in a standard form.



The other photo shows the shanty town club house display made up for "Sooky," fashioned from an old piano box and cutouts of Jackie Cooper, Robert Coogan and Jackie Searl. This was placed in front of the theatre and effectively caught the public eye. Other exploitation on this picture included tie-ups with schools, libraries and P. T. A. for posting of notices on bulletin boards; distribution of 5,000 special throwaways, especially numbered for the kiddies and good for free tickets; give-away of air gliders, promoted free of cost to theatre, and free admission to orphan school kiddies on opening day.

We are glad to record that Lassman is still hitting his usual stride up in the city of Troy and appreciate the opportunity to pass along an account of his show-selling activities to fellow Club members. Garry, when you next meet Ed Hart ask him to drop us a line and let us know how things are going. In the meantime keep up the excellent work.

BOB BOYLE SAYS:

"I'd like to say that MOTION PICTURE HERALD with the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB holds a warm spot with us. It's an intelligent, sincere service that any manager makes a mistake in overlooking."

Victory Theatre,
Holyoke, Mass.

Dollison At Del Rio

Lester Dollison, well known Club member, has moved to Del Rio, Texas, where he and his partner, L. W. Malone, are operating the Strand Theatre. For opposition Dollison has our old friend P. J. Poag, of whom our readers have often read about in this department. Now that the Club has two live-wire showmen in Del Rio, we'll expect 100 per cent representation.

ASSISTANT MANAGERS!

Managers who are members of the Club should take steps to enroll their assistants in our organization as soon as possible.

It will give them an added interest in their work and help you to impress upon them the many responsibilities that go with theatre management.

Assistants so enrolled at the request of their superiors are entitled to all the advantages of the Club but do not receive membership certificates until they have been promoted to a manager's berth.

Hundreds of our most active members joined while they were assistants and found our pages most helpful in acquiring a keen understanding of the manifold duties in theatre management, advertising, exploitation, etc. It's the real school of showmanship and provides a much-needed incentive for them to advance in the business.

GEORGE DELIS HAS BEEN BUSY SELLING VARIOUS ATTRACTIONS

Recent activities in show business out in Steubenville, Ohio, where George A. Delis holds forth as city manager of the Warner Capitol and Olympic Theatres, include campaigns on Gene Austin and His Orchestra, "Forbidden" and "Gene and Glenn."

For Austin and his Victor recording orchestra he placed an artistic cut-out, with photos af Austin, in the lobby one week in advance; ran a trailer daily one week in advance, bicycling same to the other house; had a combination Victrola and radio in lobby playing Austin's latest hits; placed pennants in stores and tire covers on taxis and private autos; posted special two-sheets in city and within radius of 30 miles, and used street car signs and tie-ups with music and radio stores. Another stunt, shown in the accompanying photo, was Austin's visit to the Home for Aged Women, where he met the oldest inmate and sang a couple of his songs. Newspaper advertising was used in local and out of town papers one week in advance.

In addition to bill posting, window cards, street car signs, newspaper advertising and special displays on "Forbidden," Delis made a special tie-up with the Police Department for distribution of cards reading, "Stop! It is forbidden to go through a red light. Wait till it turns green, then go to the Capitol Theatre," etc., etc. He also had tags made reading, "It is 'Forbidden' to park in restricted area; It is 'Forbidden' to park over the hour; It is 'Forbidden' to park all night, but it is not 'Forbidden' to park on parking stations when you go to see 'Forbidden' ". The tags were headed, "City of Steubenville Police Order."

The star was also advertised as the star of "Night Nurse" and the story as the first love story that dared to be real. It was recommended for adults only and no children were admitted unless accompanied by parents.

When preparing for the visit of "Gene and Glenn," a popular radio team of the middle west, an artistic cutout was placed in the lobby three weeks in advance; a trailer was run daily for three weeks and bicycled to other house during last week; permission was secured from Gene and Glen manager for plug over radio during broadcast hour; 200 two-sheets were posted in city and within 30 mile radius; heralds, posters and pennants used, and 2,000 postal cards were mailed out to rural routes. Other efforts included the placing of a radio in the lobby for tuning in on Gene and Glen hour; a special front on marquee; use of sidewalk stencils, and the phoning of all homes to announce arrival of the team. Newspaper advertising was used in local and out of town papers ten days in advance.

Utica Witnessed Some Snappy Show-Selling When Spencer And Hart Worked Together!

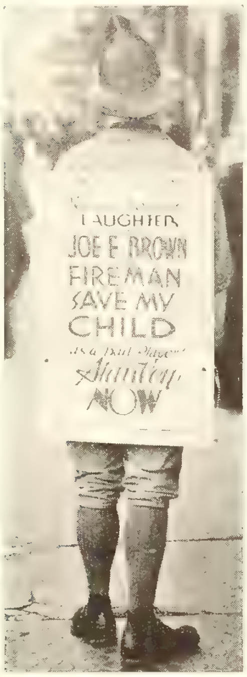
Before leaving the Stanley Theatre, Utica, N. Y., to take up his new duties as city manager for Warner theatres in Troy, N. Y., Manager Ed Hart put over a rousing campaign on "Fireman Save My Child," in which his colleague and publicity director Perry Spencer also played a leading part.



Advance work consisted of use of transparencies in lobby one week prior; a special set piece in inner lobby two weeks ahead; special overhead lobby displays with art heads and cutout letters heralding play dates, and sidewalk banner strips with applique letters under marquee for five days in advance. A special set piece featuring large mouth of Brown was placed in middle lobby.

Ballyhoos consisted of an old-time fire engine, drawn by two white horses and driven by a comedy fireman, with another one on the rear ringing bell; an old hose cart which was pulled through the streets by four young fellows dressed in comedy fire costume and wearing special advertising hats; use of an old fire engine actually 200 years old in front of theatre during engagement, and a street bally of a man dressed in combination baseball and fire costume with sign on back reading, "You will howl with laughter at Joe E. Brown in 'Fireman Save My Child' as a ball player —at Stanley—Now." Appropriate copy was of course placed on all apparatus listed above and both walking bally and old engine are shown in photos on this page.

Wide Coverage!

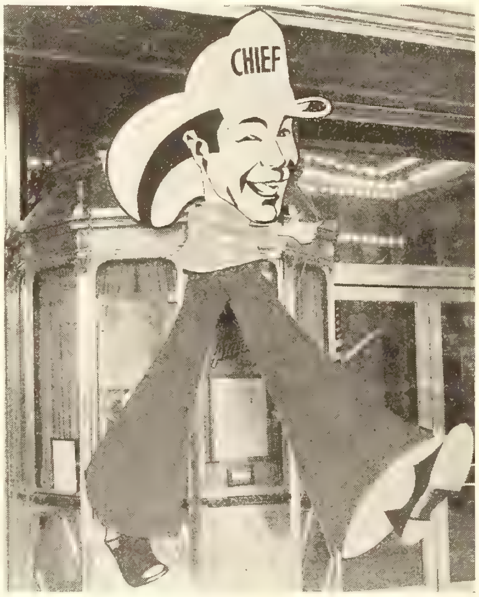
Advertising matter distributed included 2,000 red-printed novelty cards with caricature sketch of Brown on one side and title, catchlines and playdates on reverse, for placement in autos; 500 novelty pasteboard firemen hats bearing appropriate copy for use by "street" boys (hat became so popular that demand couldn't be supplied); use of advertising banners on four big delivery trucks working in and out of city; two twenty-four sheets on main routes into city, and the placing of a sixsheet on the "Busy Corner," considered the best spot in town. His newspaper advertising stood out among other ads on pages at the time and numerous readers were secured.

Tie-ups were arranged with a chain store for a special window featuring a huge comedy figure of Brown surrounded by many pairs of red pajamas; invitations sent to all baseball captains and managers in town; deal was made with newspaper to run a display ad in center of classified page for three days, with guest tickets as only cost to theatre and the inducement for reader to get one by starting ad the following day; placement of an illuminated sign in another chain store, and a tie-up with a coal company for broadcast of the show over a local station during company's regular morning hour.

The other photo on this page shows a very striking cutout figure of the comedian that was attached to the box office. It was eight feet tall, painted on wood and had red flannel for realistic effects.



You've often had occasion to read about Hart's work in past issues of the HERALD and know that when it comes to putting over a picture he's there with both feet. His campaign on this picture is no exception, we think, and contains some very interesting angles. Spencer must also come in for his share of the credit, and as both he and Hart are entrants in the current campaigns for awards offered by the Home Office, we'll wish them luck on judgment day.

In addition to regular run of newspaper display ads a special novelty ad was used very effectively and its application was original as far as Hart and Spencer are aware. This gag letter is self-explanatory and so well gotten-up that we are reprinting it in its entirety.

AN OPEN LETTER OF WARNING TO THE PEOPLE OF ONEIDA COUNTY

Utica, N. Y., Feb. 26, 1932.

Dear Friend:

Arouse yourself—sit up—take notice—I bring you a message of great warning—a red hot warning—from beginning to end full of deep importance, a message which I—in my knowledge —urge you to heed—
if you would avoid a man with fire in his heart and water on his brain, and I know you will thank me wholeheartedly for this timely epistle regarding a picture that from start to finish is a big "FLOP"—
I refer to JOE E. BROWN in "FIREMAN, SAVE MY CHILD"—a picture that is a tragedy pure and simple, full of torment and tears, and not as they say
ONE BIG COMEDY BET—which the laugh-hungry public will eat up.
I ate it up—because I had paid my money. The producers say
"The Kids adore JOE E. BROWN, the men howl at him and the women love him—
I say he makes me SICK, in this picture, as in "Local Boy Makes Good"—
——BIG MOUTH AND ALL——
Soon the streets and newspapers will be full of advertisements reading
"DON'T miss JOE E. BROWN IN 'FIREMAN, SAVE MY CHILD' "—and I say again ——BE SURE TO MISS IT—This is my warning —and if you are wise you will heed my warning and— POSITIVELY stay away from—instead of—as they hope and will tell you to—ATTEND THE STANLEY THEATRE, Feb. 28, 29 and March 1 and 2 to see this —JOE E. BROWN in "FIREMAN, SAVE MY CHILD"—this so-called ——FOUR ALARM COMEDY RIOT!——
The theater says in its effort to sell this FLOP OF A PICTURE—
"THE WHOLE DARN TOWN WILL BE LAUGHING OUT LOUD"——
(Who wants to laugh out loud—if it would make anyone laugh?)
and "YOU'LL ROAR 'TIL YOU'RE WEAK AND PROBABLY STAY TO SEE IT TWICE!"
(That "stay to see it twice" is a laugh—I couldn't get out quick enough.)
——And so, friends—listen well and listen wisely—
I'm a horn-swaggled hornspoon—and don't know nothing—if
That guy with the wide open face will have 'em in the aisles—
Besides, who wants to be happy and who wants to be gay?—What if
He will send every man, woman and child in Utica into spasms of hilarity!
I ask you—like the good friend and adviser that I am—
Do you want to see a love-struck fire-fighter wearing red suspenders?
—Well, I don't—It don't give me no thrill!
Do you want to see a guy with a wide open face playing baseball?
So the ads tell us—Well, I'm warning you—and you're foolish
if you do—SEE JOE E. BROWN at the STANLEY in "FIREMAN, SAVE MY CHILD,"
And I'm telling you, stay home and brood and wail in comfort, don't think
'Twill do you good to LAUGH AND SCREAM AND HOWL WITH JOY—
Because—you'll all be shocked and horrified—for
"HE'LL BE WEARING RED PAJAMAS WHEN HE COMES!" The whole town will go wild with astonishment at this outrageous antics— NOT —WITH GLEE!—THERE'LL SURELY BE A PANIC AT THE STANLEY!

Sincerely yours,
A WELL-WISHER.

IMPORTANT NOTE: I suppose you were inquisitive and read the whole of this letter. I only intended you to read every other line to know the truth: the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Now begin again at the beginning with "Arouse yourself," and read only every other line. A.W.W.

In addition to appearing in a local newspaper 6,000 reprints of the above letter were made in red ink on white paper and distributed house to house in 26 towns adjacent to Utica.

By this time Hart is on the new job, we surmise, and soon you'll be getting some show dope from Troy.

MONTY MAC LEVY

Our many readers and members will recall the excellent work turned out in the past by Monty Mac Levy, Publicity Director of the Randforce Amusement Company as it has appeared on our pages from time to time. Monty is a graduate of the University of Syracuse. Immediately upon receiving his pig-skin he entered showbusiness, working tirelessly in the interest of the theatre and theatre managers.

Through diligent application and constant plugging at his daily job, he continually advanced himself until he recently took over the publicity reins for Frisch and Rinzler.

Unsparingly he has given of his time and interests to showbusiness since early childhood, until he made a trip to Syracuse where the lady of his choice resides. Since that time our Monty hasn't been the same and we are informed that he will join that vast army of Benedicts in three weeks when he will walk down the aisle with one Irene Cooper.

FRED HOENSCHEIDT will continue to manage the Rialto, Sugg and Cozy theatres, Chickasha, Okla., formerly operated by Publix and recently taken over by Consolidated Theatres, Inc.

DR. ROSENTHAL, owner of the Ritz Theatre, Aberdeen, Wash., and a number of other theatres in the territory, has leased the Lyric Theatre, McIntosh, S. D.

HAROLD MURPHY, manager of Fox theatres in Olympia, Wash., recently announced that the $50,000 worth of improvements being made to the Liberty Theatre, had been scheduled for completion the early part of April.

S. GLADSTONE has been appointed city manager of Great States Theatres at Marion, Ohio.

ARCHIE BANGERT has reopened the Ruble Theatre, Logan, Ohio.

TOM BROWN has been named manager of the Empress Theatre, Denver, Colo., succeeding Frank Milton.

MISS MOLLIE MOIDEL, daughter of Mrs. C. M. Moidel, owner of the Comet Theatre, Denver, has replaced Jack Lucas as manager.

GERALD SWEETSEN, former treasurer at the Paramount Theatre, Denver, Colo., has been transferred to the Denver Theatre.

A. E. PATCHEN, formerly manager of the Avalon Theatre, Grand Junction, Colo., is the new manager of the Denver Theatre, Denver.

ROBERT GARY, RKO division exploiteer, recently paid Denver a visit.

B. P. WHALEY, of Atchinson, Kas., has leased the Rex Theatre, Gypsum, Kas. New sound equipment will be installed.

TEMPLE DEVELBISS is in charge of the Palace Theatre, Portales, N. M., a house recently taken over by the R. E. Griffith Theatres, Inc., a New Mexico corporation.

S. L. KINTER has leased the Ritz Theatre, Malakoff, Texas.

HOWARD SCHUSTER, formerly of Hope, Ark., has been appointed manager of the Majestic Theatre, Stuttgart, Ark., succeeding C. L. Crosson. Schuster has been with Publix for the past eight years.

M. D. ZIMMERMAN has taken over the Eagle and Crane theatres.

M. D. ZIMMERMAN is the new owner of the Lucile Theatre, Chicago, Ill. He also operates the Eagle and Crane theatres.

N. E. BECK, long with Publix in the South, has been made manager of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind. The announcement was made by B. V. Sturdevant, local city manager.

LOU SMITH, manager of the Elton Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., is the proud father of a nine-pound daughter, born March 23rd. Congratulations, Lou!

THE MORE THE MERRIER—C'MON IN!

KELLY WILLIAMSON is an assistant manager at this writing but by the time this gets into print there's no telling just what may have happened to this enterprising young man. Five months ago he was a doorman under Milton Overman at the Palace Theatre, Corsicana, Texas, and now he's holding down the job of assistant at both Palace and Ideal. He also handles display advertising, newspaper stories, etc. Which all goes to prove that you can't hold down a man by the name of Kelly. Overman, by the way, is now located at McAllen, Texas, and we'd like to have Kelly pass along best regards whenever they happen to meet.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

J. WINSTON BAIRD owns and manages the Gay Theatre down in Newport, Tenn., and his name on the Club roster means that still another Southern showman has become a Round Tabler. There are many other Tennesseans in this organization, Baird, and we are sure that they will be interested, as well as others in all parts of the country, in what you are doing in show-business. Sit down at that typewriter, we note that you have, and knock off an account of that last stunt you used to good results. Then send it along for the benefit of your brother Club members.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

G. TOM BAILEY hails from down South in Atlanta, Ga., suh, where he holds forth at the 81 Theatre. We also have Tom's application for membership in this organization at hand and the usual Club greetings are in order. What's doing in show-business in your neighborhood, Bailey? If you've got a good trick up your sleeve, shoot it in to Club headquarters and we'll see that others are given an opportunity to cash in on your ideas.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

WILLIAM VICTOR DWORSKI hails from out in Coshocton, Ohio, where he manages the Warner Brothers' Sixth Street and Pastime Theatres. He is another new member of this Club and he's in line for the usual Club greetings from both his fellow showmen and Club headquarters. With two houses on his hands he's without doubt a busy showman, but we'll hope that he will be able to find time to shoot along some news from his neck of the woods from time to time, Okay, Bill? Let's go.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

HAZEN L. FUNK is the skipper of the Great Lakes Theatre out in Detroit, Mich., and he's another Detroiter in line for introduction to his host of fellow showmen in this ever-increasing organization. Lots of show-business going on in his city and we don't doubt for one minute that Funk is contributing his share of the good work. The next thing to do it to get some of his ideas in print for this department, and if he'll take time off some day to send in some of them, we'll do our part of the job.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

MIKE WESHNER manages the U. S. Theatre over in the good old city of Hoboken, N. J., a town and house we haven't heard from since Manager Caruso left there to take up headquarters at another theatre. It's gratifying to again have a representative at The U. S. and now that Weshner has become a member of our Club we hope he will find the time to keep us all informed on what's going on there. How is business, Mike? Let the boys in on what kind of selling methods you're using.

B. "BERNIE" STONE house-manager for Publix down South in the Lyric Theatre, Rocky Mount, N. C., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge this showman's application for membership in the Round Table Club. It was three bells in the morning when Bernie knocked off his name and address on the w.k. blank that appears in this section every week and with that off his mind he went home to store up energy for the next day's work. Welcome to the Table, Bernie, and let's hear about what you're doing for show-business.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

LOUIS A. SCHAEFER is in charge of the Strand Theatre, a Publix house over in Stamford, Conn., and at this writing we are enrolling his name on the Club roster. We're glad to have you with the Gang, Louis, and now all you need do to keep in good standing with your many Publix brothers in this organization, is to help keep the old ball rolling along. What have you been doing over in your town in the show-selling line? Let Club headquarters know and we'll pass along the word to the other boys.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

TY GRASIANO is the manager of the Arcadia Theatre 'way down in Ranger, Texas, and we're glad to extend a cordial welcome to this new member of the Lone Star contingent. Incidentally, Ty was the manager of the Palace Theatre, a Publix house at Abilene, before taking his present post and now that he's all set at Ranger, we'll be looking for some red hot show tips from that section. Even though he's on the job seven days and seven nights a week, we have a hunch that Ty will keep us informed of his activities.

KEITH S. COSTAIN manages the Paradise Theatre, formerly the Strand, in Howard, South Dakota, and we're in receipt of a friendly letter from him to effect that he, too, has come to realize that there's much to be gained and nothing lost by becoming a member of the Round Table Club. He has followed Club pages ever since he came into this game as checker and now feels that he may be able to return some show-selling tips to the fellows who helped him along when he entered the managerial end of the business. Go to it Keith—we'll be glad to hear from you at any time.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

PAUL D. RAINSBERGER has charge of the Princess Theatre at Alton, Ill., and now that he's joined our outfit we feel it will not be long before these pages will contain an account of what's doing in the show line out in Alton. Welcome to our great fraternal order, Paul, and now let's see if you are going to do your part to keep the old ball rolling along the way it should roll. You can do your share by regularly shooting along some of your ideas about how shows are sold in your town.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

R. N. "CHRIS" CHRISTOPHER is the manager of the Federal Theatre down in Federalsburg, Md., and he also is in line for introduction to his fellow Round Tablers. Glad to have you in the outfit, "Chris," and let us hope you will become an active member of this organization. What was that last trick you put over to sell a show? Send along an account of it so we can pass the tip along to your brother showmen.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

LOU S. HART is a publicity man with the Skouras operated Academy of Music Theatre, New York City. Just a few days ago the thought struck him that in all the two years he's spent in the theatre end of this business he had procrastinated the act of sending in his application for membership in the Round Table Club. Well, Lou, that's pretty bad, we'll admit, but we and your fellow Round Tablers are a forgiving lot of folks and if you'll do something to atone for it all, we'll take your name out of the red. What say? Tell us what's been going on down your way. Is Lou Preston back, or what have you?

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

HENRY W. BEUTTEL holds down the job of assistant manager at the Alpin Theatre, a 2,400 seat Loew house over in the Bay Ridge section of Brooklyn, N. Y. At this writing he joins the ranks of the many assistant managers in this organization and we're rooting for Henry to Climb that other rung of the ladder so that we can record that he has become a full fledged Round Tabler. Give our best regards to your boss, Beuttel, and tell him we'd be glad to hear about what the two of you are doing to sell all those nice Swedish, etc., people over your way.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

FRANK H. HARRINGTON is the manager of the Empire Theatre, Whitman, Mass., which town, he states, is the home of the Regal Shoe. Okay, Frank, whether we wear 'em or not we'll give a hand to you and your Regals. Frank has joined our Club, fellow Round Tablers, and we're mighty glad to have this seasoned showman in our midst. He's been in the game for 25 years and that means he's been around. Unless we're greatly mistaken, he'll have some interesting yarns to spin concerning showmanship. Shoot 'em along, Harrington, and we'll do our part.

MUSIC AND TALENT

Keen Competition on Stage Of Four Houses in Baltimore

Keenest competition ever witnessed in Baltimore took place in the week beginning last Friday. Headline bookings at four theatres included Clark and McCullough, with Coletta Ryan, on the stage at the New theatre, which has returned to a policy of stage acts with pictures after many years without acts; Colonel Stoopnagel and Budd, at Loew's Century; Vaughn De Leath and Russ Columbo in two acts at Keith's; El Brendel with his wife Flo Bert, headlining at the Hippodrome. All these houses show pictures also.

Publix Saenger Seen About To Discard All Stage Shows

Definite evidence that the Saenger, Publix New Orleans ace house, will drop stage shows and return to an exclusive picture policy, on April 13, is seen in the report that the pit orchestra at the house has received four weeks' notice required to cancel its contract. The move is also seen as the latest step by Publix in an effort to reduce the overhead at the Saenger.

Members of the orchestra, it is understood, regard the notice as a managerial move to bring them to terms in a disagreement over the rehearsal clause in the contract. The matter was still the subject of discussion when the cancellation of contract notice was given musicians.

Warners Books Three Stars

Warner Brothers Artists Bureau has booked the following artists for personal appearances: Rae Samuels, at Philadelphia Mastbaum, week of April 16; Rubinoff, violinist, Pittsburgh Stanley, week of April 2; Robert Chisholm, tenor, Earle in Washington, week of April 2.

Closes Two-Year Engagement

Herbert Koch, organist known as "Herbie," will close a two-year engagement at the Saenger theatre in New Orleans on April 13. Paramount officials have not as yet designated a successor.

Four Mills Brothers on WABC

The Four Mills Brothers, Negro singers who have played on the stages of various motion picture houses, have been signed for a new series of bi-weekly broadcasts over a WABC-Columbia network.

Whiteman Shows "Finds"

Paul Whiteman, at the RKO Palace theatre last week, presented two of the talented people he has "discovered" through the NBC auditions he has been conducting.

"Follies of Air" To Open

Eddie Dowling, musical comedy star and author, will assist Florenz Ziegfeld in the production of the "Ziegfeld Follies of the Air," which will open over a nationwide WABC-Columbia network on April 3.

EARL ABEL

This organist has the distinction of having played in every deluxe theatre in the city of San Antonio, Texas. His latest position, which he starts this week, is at the RKO Majestic.

We think this speaks very well for his popularity.

Buddy Rogers To Broadcast

Buddy Rogers, former Paramount screen player and now conducting his own band, opened for an indefinite engagement at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York on Monday. His programs will be broadcast over an NBC network.

Shea Shifts Vaudeville

Michael Shea is shifting the RKO stage units from his Hippodrome in Buffalo to the larger Century. The Hippodrome will return to straight films, and the two houses will exchange price schedules. Vincent Lopez appears this week at Shea's Buffalo.

Anna May Wong at Paramount

Anna May Wong, Chinese stage and screen player, will be featured on the stage of the New York Paramount next week. She will be starred in the stage presentation, "Springtime in the Orient," singing in both Chinese and English.

Stage Musical at Film House

A condensed version of the stage musical comedy, "Good News" will be shown at the Roger Sherman theatre in New Haven, opening April 15. The booking was arranged by Harold Kemp, head of the Warner Artists Bureau.

STAGE SHOWS

New York Paramount

Week ending March 31

George Jessel's "Joy Jamboree," current stage-show, devised and produced by Boris Petroff, is a typical Broadway musical show, full of wit, snappy gags, good music and fine dancing, and is by far the most entertaining presentation ever offered on the boards of this house.

Opening with a snappy rhythmic dance routine by the David Bines Girls, which starts the show off well, Jessel then appears and as master of ceremonies introduces Lillian Roth, who does a great job of singing "Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea," and encored with "You're My Everything," singing it to Jessel, who nearly broke her up with his comedy. Burns and Allen, the most entertaining comedy team in show business, offered their regular routine, but using a number of new gags and a new men's hat store setting. This team always "clicks" and they did great here. Jessel next introduces Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Crawford, who, on their stage organ consoles, play the musical accompaniment for the dancing of Dorothy Paige and the Bines Ballet, in a most attractive setting.

Mrs. Crawford then plays the accompaniment for Bing Crosby's singing of "Snuggled on Your Shoulder," and a hot rendition of "Dinah." The popular Bing has a quality and nonchalance in his singing that is lacking in most other singers and this audience's reaction is representative of his popularity all over the country. Bing then sang "My Woman," with Lillian Roth playing the part and appearing in a "dive" scene, and singing "Falling in Love Again," as an interpolation. This was only one of the great bits of this show and audience reaction to it was tremendously favorable. A "restaurant" bit by George Jessel and Burns and Allen was also most entertaining. The Trainor brothers did well with their routine of eccentric rhythm dancing. A special sketch written by Jessel and Eddie Cantor, in which Miss Roth, Bing Crosby and two others enacted their bits in French, from the stage, with Jessel interpreting into English for the audience and in Jewish for his "mother," had the laughs coming so fast that the audience could hardly keep up with them. This, without a doubt, was the best part of the show. Jessel sings only one song in the entire production and that one is Eddie Cantor's "Now's the Time to Fall in Love." The finale was a burlesque on the opera "Rigoletto," with the entire company participating. Show caught Sunday night, to packed house. Feature picture was "Broken Wings," featuring Lupe Velez and Leo Carrillo.

Sanderson, Crumit on RKO Stage

Julia Sanderson and Frank Crumit, radio stars, have been signed by Martin Beck for a limited vaudeville engagement with RKO. They will open at the RKO Palace in New York on April 9.

King Marries Screen Actress

Wayne King, orchestra leader playing over National Broadcasting Company network, was married last week to Dorothy Janis, screen actress, in Highland Park, Chicago suburb.

STAGE SHOWS

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending March 17

"Cherry Blossoms" Idea opens with Jue Fong, Chinese tenor, singing "Poor Butterfly." He gives 'way to the chorus, which is attired in green gowns with trimmings resembling cherry blossoms. The opening episode is augmented by a young couple who does a bit of fast ballroom dance-stepping.

The Eno Troupe is a quintet of jugglers who are very adept at manipulating their feet as well as their bodies. The three young women of the troupe are as talented as the men.

Jue Fong, master of ceremonies, renders an operatic selection and then sings "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling." He has a pleasing personality.

For its next number the chorus gives an American's conception of a coolie dance. The number is sprightly and is augmented by Dorthea, control dancer, attired in red.

Frank Gaby clowns about and performs as a ventriloquist. He wisecracks back and forth with his dummy and sings "Many Happy Returns of the Day." He has an assistant who shouts from the balcony.

For its next number the chorus is attired in black outfits and carries green and silver parasols, which sparkle in the reflected light.

Dallas RKO Majestic

Week ending March 18

The opening turn is by Lya and Wolf, with a succession of unique aerial acrobatics, which include single arm twists, unusual trapeze work and strong-jaw accomplishments. Bertolino is a ventriloquist of no mean ability, and his mimicry and imitative actions are enjoyably different. Apparently a Frenchman, Mr. Bertolino, quite an adept in his ventriloquy, seems to have difficulty only in putting forth his expressions in English. Sidney Marion and helper, Marie Du Val, are not so hot in their routine of patter and gags, though Miss Du Val might take better if she unraveled a real song, as her voice was pleasing. Mr. Marion gave a very weak interpretation of "The Peanut Vendor" and his mannerisms did not click with the Dallas audience. The cream of the program was Earl Lindsay's Revue with Jackie Beekman master of ceremonies. The act was a clever combination of pep and musical and dancing numbers. The five pretty dancers give a varied fare of tap, toe and acrobatic dancing to the accompaniment of Beekman's peppy handling. Altogether a nicely balanced troupe which fill out a good RKO vaudeville bill for the Majestic.

Baltimore Keith's

Week ending March 25

The first act was Karre, Mooney and Noyes, two men and a girl, in classic ballroom and adagio dances on full stage. The dancing opened while Edgar Hunt, pianist and baritone, played the "Blue Danube" waltz with orchestra. Finishing this came a blonde, Winifred Greenough, soprano, and sang "All of Me." Next Hunt sang "That's Why Darkies Are Born." Followed some adagio work.

Pettet and Douglas, two men, one a dwarf, in a comedy song, dance and hokum act entitled "Two Gobs On Leave," won some applause. The next act was Mercedes and Mlle. Stantone, in musical mind reading. Next came Jim McWilliams in comedy, musical, song and monologue.

Week ending March 18

The stage show, "Jungle Rhythm," offered a delightful evening's entertainment with several novel features.

In a setting of overhanging palm trees and tropical vegetation, the Dancing Ensemble, dressed as savages, danced around a fire. The house was darkened and the Ensemble, carrying large black shields, gave an effective drill and dance.

The Three Slate Brothers, versatile comedians and dancers, acted as masters of ceremony and swapped jokes, tap danced, indulged in slapstick comedy and generally kept things moving.

Cherry Blossom and June, two unusually clever tap and acrobatic dancers, almost stopped the show with their difficult and interesting feats. Little June in particular, who appeared to be about 10 years of age, was given with well deserved applause.

Laura Hoffman, coloratura soprano, sang in a pleasing voice of wide range.

The ballot gave an interesting and graceful exhibition drill under the leadership of a skilled drillmaster. The rhythm and grace of this number was unusual and were further enhanced by striking lighting effects.

Al Trahan, comedy pianist, with the assistance of Yukona Cameron, offered nearly everything in the way of entertainment from singing and dancing to wrestling. This was an exhibition of real artistic talent descending to slapstick comedy, for Trahan possesses splendid musical technique and both he and his partner have well trained voices.

There was an elaborate finale in which the ensemble in Indian costumes with elaborate feather headdresses staged a weird dance as the curtains parted showing two magnificent horses running at breakneck speed on a treadmill with an Indian chief in full regalia standing on their backs.

San Antonio Sadler's

Half week ending March 12

Eddie See opened the bill with several lively tunes which registered greatly with the patrons.

Those featured in the stage show included Little Billy Mack, clever tap dancer; Barte Couch, juve songster; Routon's Five Educated Alley Dogs; Paul Therado, accordion soloist; Ethel Snow, lyric soprano in a cycle of songs; "The Alabama Boys," stepping musical singers, and The Texas Male Quartette brought the vaudeville at this tent theatre to a finish with a variety of melodies.

ORGAN SOLOS

MERLE CLARK (Brooklyn Paramount) presented an entertaining song-fest, with a continuity, outlined to the audience by himself, that was a little different than usual. Clark's story was built up with a musical comedy angle and proved to be a novel means of introducing each siging number. Songs featured by Clark, and all sung by the audience, were: "Love, You Funny Thing," "Good Night Moon," "You're the One," "Something to Remember You By," "Body and Soul," and a final chorus of "I Found You."

The entire solo was capably presented and this audience appreciates Clark's ability to entertain in any way he chooses. He is a personable chap who possesses a likable manner.

RAY TURNER (Columbus Palace) recently presented an enjoyable community song fest that was full of comedy and proved to be one of the most entertaining solos this popular organist has offered since his inaugural program. It was entitled "The Trouble Maker," and really was a burlesque on "in-laws." Opening chorus was "I Thank You, Mr. Moon," followed by "Was That the Human Thing to Do." A special chorus of "Good Night Sweetheart," proved to be a contest between the boys and girls. This was followed by a special comedy chorus, dedicated to mothers-in-law which started out with "M—is for the Mug," etc. Another boy and girl special and two regular choruses of "Blue of the Night," and "River Stay 'Way From My Door," were the balance of the program. This fellow Turner has this audience singing and their applause proves his popularity and their appreciation.

JACK MARTIN (Milwaukee, Wisconsin) offers "Leap Year's Love Lorn," playing an introductory bit with the words flashed on the screen to the tune of "Who's Your Little Whoosis?" followed by "Somebody Loves You," and "Starlight" accompanied by a cornet player from the orchestra. Other selections include "Too Late," a comedy parody to "Good Night Sweetheart" and "Now's the Time to Fall in Love."

FRED FEIBLE (New York Paramount), junior concert organist, presented a group of numbers for his concert, that had been requested by the radio fans of his daily broadcast. These compositions also found favor with this audience. They were: Friml's "March of the Musketeers," Lincke's "Glow Worm," Lizt's "Liebestraume" and excerpts from "Guaranty." Mr. Feible's capability at the organ is readily shown in the class of compositions his followers request.

ROBERT C. CLARKE (Detroit Hollywood) offered a clever organ prologue, "Singin' the Movies," bringing in the various type of films that are successful today and naming a number of the stars of favor. This was tied into a melodious skit written to the tune of "Faded Summer Love," "When We're Alone," "As Time Goes By" and "All of Me." A burlesque of "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain" twisted into an amusing parody of various childhood rhymes was greeted with approval by the audience. Mr. Clarke's playing has good melody and effects, and the slides were numerous enough to draw appreciative reaction.

FLOYD WRIGHT (Berkeley Fox California) is one organist who never fails to get theatre crowds to sing when familiar song tunes are played and the request is made for vocalizing. He presents "A Grab Bag of Songs" that is comprised of the following: "All of Me," "You're the One I Care For," "Love's Old Sweet Song," "A Cheerful Little Earful" and "Goodnight Sweetheart." As he plays, word slides are run on the screen. This organist finds that the best results are had when the song fests are held only occasionally.

MILTON CHARLES (Philadelphia Mastbaum) dropped the usual community singing and sang and played "Just Friends," "Was That the Human Thing to Do," and "Snuggled on Your Shoulder," with the house in darkness and flashlights playing over the audience.

OVERTURES

CHARLES B. STONE (Cincinnati RKO Albee), appropriately to St. Patrick's Day, has wisely chosen "Echoes of Ireland" for his overture this week. This is a well selected medley of the most popular airs with a background of the Emerald Isle, all executed with the well known Stone arrangement and technique. During the presentation, time is given for individual numbers by four saxaphones and three violins, playing separately. It is difficult, in fact impossible, to select a highlight from among the various tunes composing the medley, as each one seems to be on a par with the one immediately preceding. The audience at the first show enjoyed the overture to the 'nth degree, and didn't hesitate to say so with vociferous applause.

EDDIE SEE (San Antonio Sadler's) and his Concert Orchestra last week offered two most pleasing musical numbers in "Guilty" and "Asleep in the Deep." Eddie See also rendered a special trumpet solo which was a rare treat for the tent show audience. A member from the Texas Quartet did a specialty which climaxed this musical presentation at Harley Sadler's Dramatic playhouse.

PHIL FABELLO (New York Coliseum) and his Rhythm Boys presented a "Group of Favorite Songs," for their overture this week. The numbers, "Home," "I Found You" and "Milenburg Joys," were each featured in an entertainingly different manner and the aggregation's efforts were well received by this audience. This reviewer has yet to find a music director and his orchestra who are as popular with their patrons as this one obviously is.

BILLY LONG (Brooklyn Ridgewood) the new maestro here, and his fine aggregation of musicians offered an outstanding overture this week, entitled "Musical Shades of Blue." Incorporated in the presentation were "Alice Blue Gown," "Blue Horizon" and "Blue of the Night,' each number beautifully played and presented equally well as vocal numbers. Long's own singing of the last named number, came as a surprise to the audience, and their appreciative reception accorded him proved his standing with them.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

With Spring right around the corner—I said Spring, not prosperity—and Spring Fever right here (shades of Sulphur and molasses) wouldn't you like to be "Beside a Rippling Stream"? . . . That's the title of one of Whitmark's latest tunes . . . and believe you me it sort of eases that spring fever feeling when you play it . . . I might mention that it was written by Bernice Petkere . . . Don Francisco (Frank Doyle) and one of his orchestras is on radio station WOAI, San Antonio now, . . . The Don can tickle the ivories as well as the public and he is quite a favorite in the South . . . I understand that that organ job in London has finally been nailed, and by no other than Harold Ramsey, well-known throughout this country and one of the few organists playing in this country who are British citizens . . . Good-luck Harold, let's hear from you . . . I'm sure a lot of your friends here will be interested in hearing about things "over there."

G. Howard Scott, organist at Asbury Park's Convention Hall is going to change his theme song, "To the Sea," to "To the Boy." . . . Scottie is the proud Daddy of a boy and he had to come all the way up here to tell the gang about it. . . . One of the outstanding theme songs of the season is Arthur Jarrett's "'Neath the Silv'ry Moon," written by Cliff Friend and published by Robbins. . . . This song is not only being featured by the well known CBS song stylist as the theme of his daily broadcasts over the Columbia System but is likewise an important feature of his current stage offering at the Jersey City Stanley . . . That beautiful tune, "Paradise," published by Leo Feist, is a practically new tune, and is already on top of the best-seller list. . . .

Say . . . have you organists seen the new illustrated title slides that Witmark and Remick are using for their numbers. . . . Boy, they're beautiful and they certainly will help enhance your programs. . . . I don't think there is an organist in the country who doesn't know Harry (Pop) Blair, of Shapiro, Bernstein & Company. . . . Well Pop has taken over the special service department in addition to his regular duties. . . . He is now servicing everything and everyone outside New York City. . . . This includes singers, orchestras, radio, etc. . . . Blair has been with this firm for the past nine and one-half years and certainly deserves the "break." . . . I'm sure everyone who knows this "buzzard" will join me in wishing him good luck. . . . Dick Robertson, popular radio and recording star, has tied up with Vincent Lopez and his orchestra as soloist and will be featured three times a week in Lopez's broadcasts over WEAF. . . . John Gart, organist and music director in many theatres on the Loew circuit is now director of his own orchestra at Loew's Gates Theatre, Brooklyn. . . . Eddie Paul, popular music director of the Brooklyn Paramount is installing Emil Hollander as music conductor, an orchestra, vaudeville and possibly an organist at the Alabama Theatre, Birmingham. . . . The house has been on an all sound policy for the past two months and Paul has been chosen to supervise the reopening of the new policy . . . and will stay on there until things are running smoothly. . . . Paul Whiteman has lost two more pounds since his New York engagement and now weighs 187½ pounds.

That's all there is for now. . . . S'long.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 122—(A) Exactly what is meant by "arc voltage"? (B) What importance attaches to the angle of the lamp or carbons when using the ordinary arc? (C) Using the ordinary arc and assuming the crater floor to incline from the vertical at an angle of 25 degrees—or at any other angle for that matter—would the strongest illumination go forward to the center of the condenser? (D) Explain fully what importance attaches to the distance of the light source from the condenser, using either ordinary or high intensity arc. Go into this in considerable detail, using drawings if necessary.

Answer to Question No. 116

Bluebook School Question No. 116 was: "(A) To what is the light producing-power of an ordinary arc due? (B) What is the light source of a high intensity arc and why is it more brilliant than the ordinary arc? (C) Just what various items in the ordinary arc offer resistance to current flow, and in what portion does each offer resistance? (E) What is the temperature of the high intensity gas from which illumination is had?

The list of acceptable replies is not a long one. There seems to be considerable misconception with regard to some of these matters. Every one of you should examine your answer carefully, comparing it with what is published below. Those answering correctly are:

Lester Borst*, C. Rau and S. Evans*, G. E. Doe*, Lewis Goldman, John Dudiak, Roy J. Arntson, Bill Doe*, T. Van Vaulkenburg*, James McGuire*, Pat O'Brien*, H. G. Tonlin, James Devoy, William Sudbury, Tom Turk, S. Evans, S. R. Anderson, Richard T. Lomax, Frank D. True, Dan Roxbury, Dave G. Spondel, George Thompson, Dan Graby and Lon Shotts, W. D. Samuels, Roland Grandby, Sam and Andrew Wells, W. D. Little, John Williams, Andy Bailey, Henry Davis, Mike McGuire, R. L. Henderson, Thomas Besley, James Young, Phillip Ball.

That is all, and it is the smallest list in months. There seems to be a rather astonishing lack of knowledge concerning the high intensity light source. I believe Lester Borst made the best reply submitted regarding items A and B. Here it is:

"The light-giving power of an electric arc crater floor is dependent directly upon (1) its temperature per unit area, usually stated in square millimeters, and (2) its total area. The temperature of the ordinary electric arc will remain constant at the volatilization temperature of carbon, provided the arc be operated at the full electrode capacity. Its crater area will increase with increased current glow. Summing up, therefore, the light-producing power of the ordinary arc will be the candle power per unit of area multiplied by the number of units area contained in the crater floor.

"(B) The light source of the high intensity arc is the ball or bed of gas contained in and retained by the positive carbon crater. This gas is produced by the volatilization of rare minerals contained in the positive carbon core. It is more brilliant than is the crater floor of the ordinary arc for the reason that it is held at very much higher temperature than the volatilization point of carbon. The temperature of the high intensity gas is approximately 5,400 degrees Centigrade, whereas that of the ordinary arc crater floor is only about 3,800 degrees Centigrade. The candle power of the ordinary arc is now set at approximately 160 per sq. mm., whereas that of the high intensity is something like 900. The chief one of the rare minerals spoken of is Cerium."

As to C, I think we will also listen to Borst, whose answer is at least as good as that of the rest. He says:

"Regardless of its type, every electric arc offers three factors, each of which contribute to its resistance. They are the crater floor, the arc stream and the negative carbon tip. From the best information available about 60 per cent of the total resistance is chargeable to the crater floor, about 30 per cent to the arc stream, and the remaining 10 per cent to the negative carbon tip. Since the highest drop occurs at the crater floor, it of course offers the highest resistance, hence reaches the highest temperature and is therefore the most brilliant light-producing element. This latter does not hold true with the high intensity, however, in which the gas stream has the highest temperature."

As to this D, we shall give you the figures supplied by the National Carbon Company, by Dr. E. R. Geib, manager of the arc department, which figures are approved by Mr. Bassett of the Sperry Gyroscope Company, who has for many years worked in the development of high-power light sources. The figures are as follows:

The approximate temperature of the gas which serves as the light source in high intensity projection arcs, is 5,500 K, 5,300 to 5,500 Centigrade, or 9,500 to 9,800 Fahrenheit. "K" means absolute temperature, which may be explained as follows:

Temperature means molecular motion. As temperature is lowered, the motion becomes less until finally it ceases altogether at a point we designate as absolute zero. Therefore, 5,500 K represents that number of degrees above absolute zero. K-temperatures may be reduced to Centigrade by subtracting 273.

"School" Helps

As most of you know, S. Evans and C. Rau, projectionists at the Capitol theatre, in Victoria, B. C., Can., have sent in consistently good answers to every "Bluebook School" question for a long while. In a letter just received they say:

"We gain a valuable amount of knowledge through our endeavor to answer the Bluebook School questions correctly, and also have a lot of fun in doing so. We find that a lot of things that we think we know are not absolutely clear in our minds when we come to express them, and answering the Bluebook questions certainly is refreshing. We have been connected with theatrical work since about the time you issued your second handbook, and we trust that we will still be at it when you issue your upteenth."

I firmly believe any really progressive, energetic projectionist will rather come to enjoy digging out the answers to the question propounded in the Bluebook school. Beyond all doubt, any man will benefit by the study involved.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

WHAT DOES YOUR PUBLIC KNOW ABOUT RAW FILM?

NOTHING, perhaps. Yet, whether they're aware of it or not, people are profoundly influenced by the photographic quality which that film gives or does not give them on the screen. It may mean all the difference between a picture that goes its quiet, unprofitable way and one that becomes the talk of the town.

There's no need, these days, to run the risk of sacrificing photographic quality. Eastman Gray-backed Super-sensitive Negative, with its unmatched qualities and its never-failing uniformity, costs no more than other films, yet it helps substantially to head the picture for success. Wise the cameraman who uses it... lucky the exhibitor who runs prints made from it!

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 107, No. 2 April 9, 1932

NAMING THE ROSE

THE motion picture business annually enjoys about a million dollars worth of agony, conferences, telegraph and telephone bills, on the subject of titles. Largely it is a waste of time, money, energy.

Charming opportunity of taking evidence has just been afforded in the case of the estimable production which started to the market under the title of "The Man I Killed" and became, at times and places, "Broken Lullaby." The picture has been and continues to be shown under both titles, depending on exhibitor preference and other conditions.

The change in title after the New York opening was inspired, just as title changes usually are, by a whimsical manifestation. This time it was the gossip of billposters who told somebody higher up that they heard sidewalk comment to the effect that "The Man I Killed" must be another gangster picture.

It is often like that. Sometimes the name is chosen by a vote of the office boys; sometimes it is the notion of the president's wife's second cousin from Dubuque. On occasion it is the choice of the salesmanager's winsome secretary. Often it is the best available imitation of the name of a picture that made money. Meanwhile the public does not interest itself a merry hoot about it at all.

Now that the "Broken Lullaby" versus "The Man I Killed" has gone to the box office test, the indications are that the public is unmoved by either title. The returns, both in Publix houses and in other circuit and independent houses, have been examined and prove to be just average, with no advantage to either title. Last year Metro changed the title of "The Southerner" to "The Prodigal" while the picture was in the process of distribution, with the same lack of positive results or indications of title influence.

The truth appears to be that, if one puts aside titles which are positively repellent, and the once-in-a-blue-moon hit title of special patness, titles do not matter. One may cite as evidence all the big pictures of screen history from "Quo Vadis," "The Birth of a Nation," "The Miracle Man," "The Big Parade" and "The Covered Wagon." None of those was a "box office" title.

And just to be cute about it, one may also remark that every now and then neither the title nor the story has anything to do with the picture. Metro not so long ago bought the play "See Naples and Die." It came to the screen as "Oh, Sailor, Behave" and dealt with the adventures of two sailors on shore leave in Italy, although there were no sailors in the original play.

Titles do not make pictures, but pictures make titles.

WHY "FAMILY NIGHT"?

IN view of the admitted basic fact of merchandising that the women spend the payrolls and that the American family consumption is the great vital market for all industries, is it not just a shade peculiar that it has become the practice of selection committees, exhibitors and all others representing the consumer, to specially label such pictures as are deemed fit for the whole family? When a very considerable proportion of the product is of such a nature that, despite its technical excellence, the exhibitor has to scheme to keep it away from the week-end family nights one wonders what the producer had in mind. Just so long as motion pictures are made for the purpose of earning a profit the customer is always right. The big customer is the American family.

ANTHROPOMORPHIC

SIXTY-ONE persons in New York's busy Fifty-seventh street paused the other day to see a husky hoisting crew lower a ten-ton safe from a skyscraper. Two squares down the street, two hundred and thirty-nine persons were at the same time giving pause to watch four workmen emerge from an art gallery carrying a seven-hundred-pound bronze statue of a classic nude.

PAX VOBISCUM

GREAT pother is being made about the financial problems of the Metropolitan Opera in New York. In Europe opera has always lived by subsidy. In America it has been nurtured and supported by the gifts and patronage of the wealthy. The opera carries an aroma of social sanctity and high culture. If it carried an entertainment value to the masses, in any remote part of the ratio claimed for it, the masses would pay for it, just as they do for the motion picture and other emotional merchandise they like.

The painful truth is that for one true lover of the opera there are a thousand giving lip service and patronage for the purposes of conferring a supposed distinction on themselves. It is not many months ago that the great Chaliapin, with a keen penetration, gave a musician's voice to the opinion of many another student of the arts of expression in admitting that opera was a dead art—very dead. Opera relates itself to art and the interests of the modern world as a kingly game of chess, played with living figures on a cloth of gold field, would to modern sport.

Some day, probably centuries from now, the panting pursuers of culture will discover that the great art medium, the great instrument for the re-creation of events, for the creation of drama, is indeed the motion picture, the heir of all the arts of expression, and the successor to most of them.

A RESEARCH by Film Daily reveals that the works of 491 authors were used in making 622 features in the United States last year, or "an average of less than 1½ pictures for each author during the year." One can readily appreciate that, and point out that doubtless the ½ features were those which started the double bill epidemic. One might, to be sure, twist it the other way and say that each picture used 78.93 per cent of an author in getting made. Maybe that is just as true.

'SEEMS TO HAVE IT IN FOR THE MOVIES'

BROOKHART

In the GAZETTE of ST. JOSEPH in MISSOURI, Rev. Burris Jenkins, a leading clergyman of Kansas City as well as editor of The Christian, writes in the column "The Drift of the Day" that "Senator Brookhart seems to have it in for the movies" and in rebuttal says he "has seen a lot of good movies lately." Expanding upon the theme of the motion picture as a new art, the churchman says:

> Senator Brookhart seems to have it in for the movies. Lots of people have. I think it is generally people who don't go to see them who inveigh against them most vigorously. I understand that the dramatic and literary critics who have attained to the highest eminence are against them to a man. It is never wise to get too wise.
> I cannot stand for the movies all in all, nor for all the movies. Neither can I stand for all the fiction and all the newspapers. But I have seen a lot of good movies lately. I don't know any recent book or drama that carries such a message as the new play of George Arliss, "The Man Who Played God." The story from which it is taken, written by Gouverneur Morris, never made half the impression the screen drama makes. Of course the art of George Arliss gives it its tremendous punch.
> I saw also a preview of the Paramount picture entitled "A Broken Lullaby," taken from a French book with the name, "The Man I Killed." The original name would be much preferable, to the dainty little name given to the American picture. That's a wonderful play.
> Now the fact is that the talking motion picture is a new art. It is neither photography alone, nor is it speaking drama alone. It is a combination of both that becomes neither. To appreciate it properly one must regard it as something new under the sun. You cannot be intelligent in estimating it unless and until you get that point of view. Undoubtedly it reaches the masses. And anything that does should command our respectful attention and estimation.
> What is the old definition of a classic work of art? It is such a work as generation after generation, thousands and millions of people, have passed in front of, have gazed upon, and have pronounced beautiful. Nothing becomes a classic all in a day, nor in one generation. The speaking motion picture must be viewed by millions and pronounced good before it can become classic. So must any other work of art. New as it is, how can anybody, however wise, pronounce it all bad, or, indeed, all good? Time only can tell.
> Meantime, I, for one, do not intend to let this new work of art go by without my attention. I am going to make no sweeping generalizations about it, but I am interested in it and I am going to study it. More than that, I am going to bring it back into my church.

BETTER

Discussing the coming of two additional motion picture theatres to UNIONTOWN in PENNSYLVANIA, the INDEPENDENT of that city digresses to comment on pictures and prospects for better productions, in these words:

> . . . Recently about the only kind presented here was pictures that glorified the crooked woman, and stories of crooks and the underworld. These may serve to bring to mind that a serious condition exists in America, but we must be reminded of the ways to meet such evils.
> It seems the moving picture magnates have seized upon the present lax law enforcement, the corrupting of the courts, and the alliance between underworld and the corruptible officers, as a means of immense profit. Some of the pictures are but thinly veiled attempts to show the impressible youth how easy it is to beat the law. Better pictures are now being made and are on the market. They are now being shown in nearby towns and cities. And it now looks as if Uniontown will get some of them and regain its lost prestige in the amusement world.

AN IDEA

To have had the pre-prohibition section of "The Wet Parade" written by a dry and the prohibition section by a wet, without permitting dramatists to "destroy each other," is the somewhat belated suggestion of the STAR of KANSAS CITY in MISSOURI, saying:

> There has been considerable protest against the crime wave in the talkies. Although the producers have had a ready defense, apparently they are not insensible to the resentment aroused by plays peopled by gangsters and showing their operations. At least there is one effort to vary the class of plays objected to. Getting out of the rut, but not out of the class, a new play, made from an Upton Sinclair novel, has been produced. Ordinarily, single authorship is preferable to collaboration. But in dramatizing this controversial subject, it might have occurred to the producers to have the pre-prohibition section written by a dry and the prohibition section written by a wet. If this could have been done without permitting the dramatists to meet and destroy each other, a stirring play should have resulted.

Obvious

Says the CHRONICLE of SAN FRANCISCO in CALIFORNIA, challenging a statement that motion pictures "may be very nearly history itself":

> Motion pictures, says Guglielmo Ferrero, may be more than an aid to history, "they may be very nearly history itself." He asks what it would mean to the historian of today to have talking films of the Congress of Vienna, which parceled out Europe after the fall of Napoleon.
> To one of the foremost figures in the Vienna Congress is attributed the aphorism that diplomacy is the art of concealing thought with words. But some of our modern diplomats are not slouches at this kind of thing. It is intriguing to think what the future historian might get out of films which, unhappily, have not been made of current international affairs.
> For instance, a Japanese statesman assuring the world that Japan is acting purely on the defensive at Shanghai. Would a film audience regard the picture as tragedy or comedy? There can be no doubt of the audience's response to a film showing a Nipponese diplomat informing the United States that the seizure of Manchuria is solely for the purpose of carrying out the nine-power treaty. This picture would be the laugh of the month.
> Yet, in the end the public would probably grow tired of the historical films and demand something with a plot that everyone could not see through from the first reel.

BLOCK BOOKING LEGALITY UPHELD IN 12 YEAR FIGHT BY PARAMOUNT

Opinion of U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals Declared Blow to Smith Wildman Brookhart's Petition to Bar Practice

Federal Trade Commission's Plea for Enforcement of Its "Cease and Desist" Order Is Denied; Case Started in 1921

Block booking is not unlawful. Its legality as practiced by large distributors was unconditionally upheld in an opinion handed down in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the second circuit (New York) on Tuesday. The opinion reverses the Federal Trade Commission's order to Paramount-Famous Lasky Corporation to "cease and desist" in its practice of block booking; it denies a petition for court enforcement of the order and it brings to an end anti-trust litigation based largely on block booking practices which were first assailed by the Federal Trade Commission in 1921. The opinion results in a complete victory for Paramount in its 12-year defense of its sales practices, and appears to be a blow to Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart's petition for the abolition of block booking.

Holding that Paramount had exercised a legal right in selling its product to the best advantage and in such quantities and to such persons as it chose, the opinion sets forth that the distributor enjoyed neither a monopoly nor the ability to acquire one. It holds, further, that the "means and methods" employed by Paramount in film distribution were merely matters of business judgment involving the legal right of the company to "bargain and negotiate," and that the method of negotiation employed by the distributor disclosed no unlawful tendency to hinder competition or create a monopoly. As a result of these findings, the Federal Trade Commission's petition for enforcement of its "cease and desist" block booking" order was denied by the court for lack of evidence.

Exhibitor organizations, principally Allied States Association, have been campaigning against compulsory block booking in recent years.

The opinion was handed down by U. S. District Court Judge Martin T. Manton, and associates Chase and Augustus N. Hand. It was based on a review of voluminous testimony, gathered during the 12 years of the case's history, and presented to the court early last month. The opinion held:

1. That block booking as practiced by the defendant did not operate to the detriment of competitors;

2. That it did not unfairly affect competition, or lessen competition within the industry;

3. That it does not deny to exhibitors a freedom of choice in leasing films;

4. That price increases on films bought individually, after purchases en bloc have been refused, are incidents of bargaining and negotiating between buyer and seller, and, therefore, lawful;

5. That a distributor of films "by lease or sale has the right to select his own customers and to sell such quantities at given prices, or to refuse to sell at all to any particular person for reasons of his own;

6. That a sale is unlawful only when it is brought about by an agreement, actual or implied, on what the resale price shall be;

7. That a distributor has not only the right to sell in blocks, but also the right "to adhere to a policy of terms of sale, price of sale, and persons to whom they sell," so long as the deals are not made as the result of a conspiracy or agreement with other producers;

8. That "tying" contracts, or those in which one or more different articles are tied together for sale, are unlawful only when enforced by a corporation which has a monopoly in its field.

Although the original complaint filed by the Federal Trade Commission named numerous other individuals and companies in addition to Paramount-Famous Lasky, and charged the defendants with conspiracy to further a monopoly, charges were subsequently dropped against all but Paramount, Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky.

Proceedings in the case were begun in 1921, and an amended complaint was served in 1923. Paramount filed an answer to this complaint, and the gathering and submission of testimony lasted until 1927, during which time practically every prominent figure in the industry took the witness stand at one time or another, and attorneys for both Paramount and the Federal Trade Commission made junkets to virtually every key city in search of evidence. In 1927, the Federal Trade Commission's order to cease and desist block booking was issued against Paramount. The commission's orders are not binding until upheld by a court.

Paramount disregarded the Commission's order to cease and desist, and in 1928 the Commission petitioned the U. S. Circuit Court for an enforcement order. The voluminous testimony taken during the hearings, which had to be presented to the Appeals court for review, would have cost the Commission approximately $200,000 to print. With this sum not available, the Commission, by agreement with attorneys for Paramount, then proceeded to reduce the record to a reasonable length. In four years of joint effort by attorneys for both sides the record was reduced from 32,000 pages of testimony and additional exhibits to 2,000 pages. The reduction of the record resulted in the withdrawal of charges against Paramount of furthering a monopoly, and confined itself only to a charge of unfair methods of competition in the practice of block booking.

Doubt Appeal for Time at Least

Reduction of the record was completed early this year, and the revised record presented to the Appeals court for review and an opinion, last month.

Attorneys engaged in the lengthy litigation were Robert E. Healy, chief counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, and his assistant, Attorney Martin A. Morrison. Attorneys for Paramount were Bruce Bromley and Frederick H. Wood of the law firm of Cravath, de Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood, New York.

The Commission has not indicated whether or not it would appeal the decision by taking the case to the United States Supreme Court, its final recourse. Indications at Washington, however, are that in view of federal economies now being pressed there is little likelihood of such an appeal being made at any time in the near future. Washington observers also incline to the belief that the decision does much to weaken Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart's petition for an investigation of the industry and his bill for the abolition of block booking.

Arthur Leases Fox NewEnglandHouses

The Fox Theatres Corporation has leased to Arthur Theatres Corporation the 18 houses constituting the Fox New England circuit. Harry Arthur has resigned as general manager of the Fox Theatres Corporation and managing director of the Roxy theatre in New York to organize the new company, of which he is president.

Herschel Stuart, formerly general manager of Fox New England Theatres, has resigned to become managing director of the Roxy, replacing Arthur.

LIGHTMAN PROMISED RELIEF ON TYING IN

Warns Distributors That Connecting Short Subjects with Features in Sales Coercion Is "Heading for Trouble"

Warning that distributors who persist further in tying in short subjects with feature sales "are headed for trouble," M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, announced plans for protesting the practice to sales heads. Lightman is in New York to put into action several of the resolutions adopted at the recent national convention of the MPTO at Washington.

Assurances of relief from the tying-in practice were given Lightman on Wednesday by several sales managers. Definite assurances were also obtained from RCA Photophone and Erpi that ten days' notice would be given exhibitors before equipment removals because of delinquent payments.

"The bitterness and determination of the attack on the practice of tying in shorts with features at our convention should demonstrate to all distributors the seriousness with which exhibitors nationally regard this subject, and the danger to distributors of continuing it," Lightman said. "Hundreds of complaints directed against distributors have been received by our organization, and it is indicated clearly that distributors who do not stop it are headed for trouble."

Lightman said that more time was devoted to this subject and more feeling evidenced during discussions of it than on any other convention topic. Among other subjects of convention business which will be advanced by Lightman during his current New York visit are an appeal to Erpi for reduction of service charges and the making of an effort to obtain ten-day notices from RCA Photophone and Erpi before service on delinquent accounts is discontinued.

MGM Protest Meet Comes to Impasse On Complications

Disagreement over the wording of a statement which was to have reported the result of the meeting of the continuing committee with Felix Feist, MGM sales manager, at the latter's office in New York, this week, called for resumption of the meeting after it had been adjourned and resulted in postponement of issuance of any statement for another week. The committee, which was an outgrowth of the Metro National Protest Meeting, sponsored by the MPTO of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware, which was held in New York last fall for the purpose of protesting MGM's percentage sales policy, is to meet again with Feist next Tuesday.

Following this week's meeting with the Metro sales executive, members of the committee assembled in the New York office of the MPTOA to draft a public statement of what transpired at the meeting. Indications were that an agreement of some sort had been reached and that the day's meeting had achieved definite results. The committee's statement, however, was to have been a joint one, and when read to Feist over the telephone, objections were raised which resulted in reconvening of the committee in Feist's offices. Similarly, continued disagreements prevented the later drafting of the statement, and the meeting was postponed for one week.

Meeting with Feist were: Walter Vincent, chairman of the committee; Dave Barrist, Lewen Pizor and Jay Emanuel of the MPTO of eastern Pennsylvania; Edgar A. Levy, MPTO of Connecticut and M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA.

Kent Pledges New Exhibitor Hearings On Poster Policies

Assurance that a hearing would be given exhibitors who are protesting Fox's action in copyrighting advertising accessories and demanding the return of the material after use, was given this week by Sidney R. Kent, executive vice president of Fox. The exhibitor's viewpoint will be presented to Kent by Charles O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York; Sam Sonin, treasurer of the same organization, and Rudy Sanders, a member.

An audience with Kent was sought following a meeting late last week of Greater New York exhibitors. An open discussion of the effects on exhibitors of Fox's action led to the announcement that any attempt on the part of the distributor to prosecute poster renters would be defended by the exhibitors' group, and attempts to obtain injunctions against renters would be contested.

Inquiries addressed to the Fox legal department relative to the course of action the company intended to pursue in the enforcement of its new poster policy were referred to Kent.

"This is a matter that cannot be discussed fully at this time," Kent said. "After we have heard all sides of the case our conclusions will be drawn."

Exhibitors contend that Fox's action would increase the cost of accessories to theatres about $8 weekly at a time when overhead is of increased significance. Arguments were advanced that percentage playing makes the exhibitor a partner of the distributor and that accessories should be supplied without charge, as maximum sale of the picture thus played is of equal benefit to the distributor.

Eastman Official Dies

E. Leonard Stapleton, 42, for eight years head of the statistical department of the Eastman Kodak Company, died at his home in Rochester last week from a heart attack.

P. A. Powers Forms New Concern; Buys B. I. P. America

P. A. (Pat) Powers, one of the foremost pioneers of the motion picture industry, has returned actively to production and distribution through the formation of Powers Pictures, Inc., and the purchase of control of B.I.P. America, American distributing unit of British International Pictures. The latter deal was closed late last week with M. A. Dent, managing director of the English concern, and gives Powers, in addition, a substantial interest in the parent company. Dent sailed for London after the close of negotiations. David A. O'Malley is president of the firm.

Powers Pictures will release a selected group of British International products made at the Elstree studios in England, as well as the productions of American independent companies. More than 30 features and a group of shorts will comprise the company's release schedule. A policy of permitting exhibitors to preview all films before booking will be followed in selling, according to Powers.

Harry Cohen, one of the organizers of Metro, and who represented that company abroad for a long period before becoming head of Columbia's foreign distribution, is the sales manager for the Powers organization. National distribution plans are in process of formation. In four sections of the country, the firm has its own offices, in others it has made franchise deals.

At a meeting of the board of directors of B.I.P. America, following the completion of the deal, the following officers were elected for the Powers company: David A. O'Malley, president; Arthur Dent, vice president; Harry Post, treasurer. William Rabell has resigned his post as secretary, director and general sales manager of B.I.P. America. He is expected to announce his future plans shortly.

British International Pictures, of London, will make ten quota films for M-G-M distribution in England under terms of a deal closed with John Maxwell, stated Arthur M. Loew, head of the M-G-M foreign department, on his return from a short trip abroad on Wednesday. The B.I.P. deal is in addition to three quota films which Eric Hakim is making for M-G-M.

Loew found a good deal of optimism prevailing in England. "The English pound is getting stronger and general economic conditions improving," he declared, "although theatre business is nothing to cheer over. France, I found, is turning pessimistic."

Loew returns to the continent in September or October and will fly to South Africa from London. He hopes to arrive in Johannesburg in time for the opening of the new Loew theatre there.

Allen to Confer With Hammons And Will Then Vacation Abroad

Educational coast studio manager, E. H. Allen, will leave Hollywood for New York on Saturday for home office conferences with E. W. Hammons, president, after which he will travel to Europe for a vacation which is scheduled to last eight weeks.

FOX TO MAKE FILMS FOR ALL U. S., NOT FOR BROADWAY: SIDNEY KENT

More the Impersonal Executive Than Dramatized Dynamo, But This Isn't Selling Season; Calls Block Booking Best Plan Yet

By TERRY RAMSAYE

The Fox Film Corporation, under the general management of Sidney Kent, intends to make motion pictures for the United States and let Broadway take care of itself.

That, in essence, is Mr. Kent's declaration of policy in the first public expression he has made since taking his new post in the industry.

Sitting in one of the great open spaces of the executive acreage at 444 West Fifty-seventh Street, the new general manager of Fox talked with a most calm conciseness about the ills of the industry, with neither alarm nor bubbling promise. He sees most of the pains of the industry as symptoms, rather than causes, and many of the remedies to come from the operation of simple natural forces in the total economic structure of American business. He recognizes the existence of a pattern of evolutionary development even in the allegedly "different" motion picture business, and apparently expects no miracles.

Impersonal Executive, But—

On this occasion, at least, Mr. Kent seemed, without any loss of vigor, to be considerably less the dramatized dynamo and more the institutional, impersonal executive. This, however, was not precisely a selling session. One would gather that he is likely to have a deal more to say some weeks hence than now.

It may be definitely stated, incidentally, that there is no such proviso, as reported, in Mr. Kent's contract for his assuming the presidency of the corporation, but there remains the impression that such an eventuation may be expected. It is in the pattern of the picture at the Fox Corporation, and considerably in line with what may be deduced as the attitude of E. R. Tinker, who, in his particularly financial relation to the concern's affairs, could doubtless as well function as chairman of the board. Meanwhile, it is to be gathered that titles do not matter much. In a motion picture sense, Kent is running the company, which is the chief concern of the motion picture business.

No sweeping personnel changes in the Fox staff are to be expected as part of the Kent program. He remarks that he has no retinue of followers to bring in from elsewhere and that the members of the organization, as it is, stand on their individual responsibilities to hold their jobs by filling them.

For Theatres of the Country

The Fox announcement of coming new product for the season to follow, is not to be made for some sixty days. Until that time Mr. Kent, nor anyone else at Fox, is likely to have much to say about it.

"We have, I think," he observed, "a promising, effective line-up of material, and an idea of treatment in production which I certainly am not going to give to the world, at this time.

"But it can be said that we are to make pictures that are aimed at the audiences of the theatres of the country—pictures for Muscatine and Des Moines—yes, you can add Dubuque, too. If it happens that this product goes over on Broadway that will be by-product, velvet."

The great cosmic headache known as the Depression, of course, came into the conversation, along with some mention of manifestations at the box office and vicinity.

"Symptoms" to Disappear

"Many of the troubles of the day, discussed as causes of bad business, are really just symptoms. Remember the bad days of 1921. We had double bills, three tickets for the price of one, free turkey shows, premiums and all manner of selling expedients. Principles, ethics, business judgment, everything goes by the board in the days of desperation and nothing is stronger than the fight for existence. You cannot make an exhibitor stop at anything from cut prices to triple bills if he thinks it will save his business. Now in that depression of ten years ago, we had all these symptoms and as buying power improved and business in general picked up, the symptoms disappeared. They will again for the same reasons."

The decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the twelve-year-long controversy between Famous Players-Lasky and the Federal Trade Commission over the application of the block booking plan of selling, came in for a word of attention from Mr. Kent, important in view of his long and close personal association with the defensive side of the controversy.

A Natural Development

"Block booking was a natural development in the industry, an inevitable outgrowth of the older system of program selling of General Film days. It is a method apparently inherent in the nature of the business. In the event block booking at last fails to serve, it will be abandoned in behalf of something that seems more workable.

"Block booking, like all such general forms of business operation, has its faults and its special cases where it does not adequately apply, but in the main it is a satisfactory instrument, both from the point of view of the distributor and of the exhibitor."

"I have observed," remarked Mr. Kent with a grin, "that the exhibitor who has hand picked and individually bought a group of pictures is just as full of complaints as though he had bought a block, if the pictures do not do business for him. I think he is quite as well off in the main selecting producers and lines of product as he is trying to pass judgment on individual productions.

"If the average of the product delivered is profitable to him he is well served, and if it is not he is not served, and it makes no difference how he buys it. Last year with production value below average, shopping in many cases would have been useless."

Says Important Independents' Ability Makes Unimportant Whether They're Working For Themselves or Others

The present manifestation of vastly increased activity among independent producers appears to make little impression on Mr. Kent.

"There are," he remarks, "two divergent types of independent picture makers. The important independents are persons of the sort of ability which makes it unimportant whether they work for themselves as independents, or for large organizations as employees. There are a good many who are just now excited over what they think are the indications of a big double bill market, in which they can hope to sneak into some easy money my making the weak, cheap second pictures of the double bill. This is a transient manifestation, a phase, and it will pass as the improvement in the business eliminates the double bill."

We exchanged some notions about the mad inflation years leading up to the Depression. Mr. Kent would not agree with a suggestion that easy stockholders' money was a very important factor in the extravagant expansion spree, although willing enough to remark on the "over-builders, the over-egotists," and the "too much everything."

Foundation Investment

"It was not, I am sure,," he said, "that the ruling executives were operating with a notion of taking any advantage of stockholders, but they did have, being founders, a sense of its being their personal business. That is inevitable, because it is not so many years ago when they did really own what there was of the business. But when they plunged and made mistakes, they hurt themselves quite as much as the other stockholders. In every instance they were themselves very heavily interested."

"And," in this Mr. Kent grew just a shade emphatic, "remember that the great foundation investment in this industry is its own money, its earnings ploughed back into the business. The sum total of the motion picture industry's investment in itself is tremendously greater than the subsequent investments of bankers. That is important."

Wisconsin's Injunction Hearing Set for April 23

Hearing in connection with the permanent injunction sought by Wisconsin distributors to prevent the state department of markets and agriculture from proceeding with an investigation of alleged unfair trade practices, tentatively set for April 2, will be held April 23 in either Milwaukee or Madison.

BROADWAY STAGE FROM CAMERA EYE

Seven Productions of the Speaking Stage Come Within Range of Critic's Comments

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

Superiority of the screen over the stage for certain types of plays and "the magic of the films can often transpose trash into a vital, breathing drama," writes Benjamin DeCasseres in this the fifth of his articles for MOTION PICTURE HERALD on current stage plays and their potentialities for the screen.

INTIMATE RELATIONS

O, little bum play, don't you cry,
You'll be a talkie by-and-by!

This rather smart alecy couplet occurred to me when I saw "Intimate Relations," by Earle Crocker, starring Blanche Ring, who in this production doesn't wear rings on her fingers or bells on her toes. Allah! but she was the Stuff in the old days!

Jane Marshall discovers that a late husband, now in his ashes, has been a sex-rowdy when he was a going concern. She finds that he has also among his assets an extra son begotten without a license.

Now cut to the two astonished "legit" children. The girl is married to a de luxe and super booze-hound, played by Bruce MacFarlane in a way that almost justified the existence of the show.

After some inconsequential business in this weak and wobbly attempt at a farce-comedy, Jane invites the "illegit" into the household and cuts loose, ostensibly to get even with herself for being such a goose during the lifetime of her high-jinks spouse. Her illusions have sagged—so whatterhell! And they get plastered.

In the final reel things are made chemically pure and we fade out on a sweet clinch.

It's dull; but can be greased up for a screen shiner—maybe.

HAPPY LANDING

This play in three acts and nine scenes, by John Hymer and William Barry, is aviation, blizzard, money, the gal, who is a telephone operator at Old Orchard, Me., and the hooey and hokum that doth attend a National Hero.

For Blin Gardner (Russell Hardie) has made the first non-stop flight to Japan. He made fifty thousand bucks out of it and has to go through medals, radio, movies, necking by a rich girl (object matrimony) and even gets a Colonelship in the army (that's getting pretty close to a Certain Person—eh?)

Romance? Well, the telephone girl (Margaret Sullavan, and some fine actress she is!) goes down into her—what's feminine for jeans?—and delivers to him the jack to make the trip.

There are two garage men played by Harry Davenport and Edwin Redding that furnish the humor—the most genuine part of this spoof at aviation heroes.

Sold! All you need, gentlemen, is a whiz-bang cast and a smoking-hot director.

BORDER-LAND

Spiritualism is the last resort of the imagination—either on the stage or screen. It's easy to solve any crime if you're in the Big Know. But it simply never happens in real life.

And for that reason Crane Wilbur's mystery play, "Border-Land," with Lester Vail playing the earthly-other-world go-between, doesn't jell. But there are all the elements of a picture here—maybe with Jack Barrymore doing the hooey stuff.

There are comedy, a Chinaman, a strangulation with a corking death-rattle, a love story, a trance and a mix-up in your guesses as to who killed Gene Cordovan.

The play is wheezy long before the end in this creaking mental walk-up; but I can imagine it knocking out some shekels in the Mystery Belt.

LIFE BEGINS

Six women sitting in beds in the maternity ward of a New York hospital waiting to bring into the world more revenue agents, gun molls and hoofers.

A murderess is brought in. She is serving twenty years for having bumped off a politician that escaped Seabury. She is going to have a baby also. Hubby awaits her (this is all as hazy as the income tax of a hi-jacker).

All is sheer drool and drivel and waxy sentimentalism for several acts. (Bodies being wheeled in and out.) The girl wise-cracker who is going to get twins (the life of this expanding party) is played for laughs, which she gets, by Glenda Farrell.

The only big moment in the play is right at the end. The boy wants the baby sacrificed and the mother (the 20-year murderess) saved, while the mother wants vice versa (Caesarian operation). The mother is obeyed and the husband is left with a motherless kid on his hands. This is the only big spot in the saga.

A weak, sickening, purposeless play, which might make a whirlwind hit on the screen with the Four Marx Brothers as the four doctors and Marie Dressler in bed about to give out triplets.

THE DARK TOWER

By a curious coincidence Dr. Walter Boughton Pitkin in his book "The History of Human Stupidity," a page excerpt from which was published in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of March 26, hit upon the same play and picture, "Street Scene," as I did to illustrate that a play that was, in our view, very poor could be made into such a powerful and entertaining picture. My statement appeared in the HERALD two weeks before the Doctor's.

Nothing better than "Street Scene" can illustrate the superiority of the screen over the stage for certain types of plays. The magic of the films can often transpose trash into a vital, breathing drama.

"The Dark Tower," for instance, which has had quite a run on the stage. This play was obvious, sprawling and creaked in every joint. It concerned a doctor who lured persons to his place up the Hudson and petrified them. He is trapped and is suffocated to death in his own rooms. There is no mystery, no click.

But there is here the foundation for a screen mystery of continual action and breathless guessing in the hands of a slick scenario writer and director. Gruesome, romantic, climacteric, "The Dark Tower" probably would give the mystery fans a good hour's gasp.

HAY FEVER

Noel Coward is one of the most brilliant and sophisticated of modern writers for the stage. He takes a set of extremely odd people, as in "Hay Fever," or a set of extremely normal people, as in "Private Lives," and plays on them and through them like an intoxicated Puck.

There are a gusto, a delight, an ease, a chortling devil-may-care spirit in Coward that puts him in a class all his own. He has the fantastic nick in his brain. He is Whimsy with a firm and serious grip on his material. And the pictures cannot have too much of this Comic Spirit.

"Hay Fever" was new to me, and to many of us, for it went boom some years ago when it was first produced. But Patterson McNutt evidently believes the players, and not the play, are the thing. And so he marshalled a capital company, headed by Constance Collier, to produce this thin-as-air farce-comedy of a family that sees all that happens to it and to its house guests in terms of the theatre or the novel.

David Bliss is a writer and Judith, his wife, is an ex-actress (if an actress or an actor ever becomes an ex!). They have two children who are the spit and spawn of the ego-centered, politely rude parents. They invite a lot of week-enders and pay no attention to them when they arrive. The guests sneak back to London when David Bliss is reading a chapter of his novel to his family. They behave just as though they had no guests.

It is all very brittle, sensitive and tenuous, and it is Constance Collier and Eric Cowley as the wife and husband who pull "Hay

SEVEN COMPANIES BUY 25 STORIES AND A MYSTERY SERIES IN MARCH

Seasonal Purchasing of Screen Material in Full Stride; Total Parallels Number of Originals by Studio Writing Staffs

Producers are swinging into one of their most active seasonal flurries of story material purchasing, and seven companies acquired production rights to 25 stories and a mystery series in March. The story buying period just opened will continue to gather momentum throughout the month, subsiding as annual sales conventions are approached and passed. The buying embraces material both for the completion of this year's schedules and initial production groups on next year's schedules, the latter to be held for convention announcements.

Current story material, for the most part, is being purchased by producers who have star quotas to fulfill; that is, most of the purchases are made with a view to the the story's suitability to a particular star whose quota for the year has not been completed. The purchases are in addition to an almost identical number of originals either completed or in preparation by studio writing staffs.

Diversified Material Represented

The March purchases represent a diversified list of fiction material, with essentially all popular entertainment classifications represented. Stage plays, either adaptations or originals, lead individual groups of source material with nine such purchases. Magazine stories, of which there are seven, are second. Next comes novels, six of them. Mystery stories include one individual work and one series of an undetermined number of stories, and, lastly, one Western. Among the novels are two remakes of silents, for which the producer acquired sound rights in March.

A breakdown of the material reveals that realism will play a prominent part in forthcoming features, with 12 of the 25 purchases falling into that classification. Included are dramas of newspaper columnists of the gossip type, stage personages and criminal characters. Melodramas of a variety of more or less fanciful themes are next in popularity, there being nine of that classification. Mystery stories follow, and comedy and Western themes come last, there being one each of these.

In the first returns of the Hays office audience preference poll, a majority of those replying thus far have indicated "adventure stories" as first choice for film fare. Strictly speaking, not one adventure story is represented in the purchases of the month. Next in popularity, according to the first returns, was mystery; closely followed by comedy. These entertainment classifications are, respectively, next to last, and last, among the purchases. However, later balloting may reverse the first order of entertainment themes and these indicated public preferences may be served by producers in original stories by their own writing staffs.

As a special feature during this active season of story material purchasing, MOTION PICTURE HERALD will present, once a month, a tabulation of material purchased by the larger producers during the month preceding publication of the summary. Following are purchases reported in March:

Fox

"The Trial of Vivienne Ware," mystery story by Kenneth M. Ellis.
"The Woman in Room 13," stage play by Samuel Shipman and Max Marcin.

Warner Brothers—First National

"New York Town," an unproduced play by Ward Morehouse.
"The Mudlark," story by Arthur Stringer.
"I'm a Fugitive from a Chain Gang," story by Robert E. Burns.
"Blessed Event," play by Manuel Seff and Forrest Wilson.
"They Call It Sin," novel by Alberta Stedman Eagan.
"Crooner," by Rian James.

Universal

"Glamour," magazine story by Edna Ferber.
"Counsellor at Law," stage play by Elmer Rice.

Adventure Stories, First in Public Preference Thus Far in Hays' Poll, Are Not Represented in Stories and Plays

"Harlem," play by William Jordan Rapp and Wallace Thurman.
"Laughter in Hell," by Jim Cullen.
"The Prison Doctor," novel by Dr. Louis Berg.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

"The Web and the Net," unpublished story by Richard Wilmer Rowan.
"The Claw," melodrama by Henry Bernstein; produced for the stage in 1921 by Arthur Hopkins.
"The Harbourmaster," novel by William McFee.
"Reunion in Vienna," stage comedy by Robert E. Sherwood.
"Footlights," story by Clarence Buddington Kelland.

(In addition, MGM has acquired sound rights for remakes of the following silent pictures: "The Torrent" and "The Temptress," both from novels by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, adapted by Dorothy Farnum, and released by MGM in 1926.)

Paramount Publix

"Wild Waves," stage comedy-drama by William Ford Manley (to be released under the title, "The Crooners").
"Lone Cowboy," story by Will James.

RKO Radio-Pathe

"Is My Face Red?", play by Allen Rivkin and Ben Markson.

Columbia

"Soldiers of the Storm" novel by Thomas Burtis.
"The Destroyer," story by Harry Hervey.
Series of Anthony Abbott murder mysteries.

Tinker, on Coast, Expresses Enthusiasm on Fox Personnel

President Edward R. Tinker of Fox, in Hollywood this week, expressed himself as highly enthusiastic about the future. Tinker is on the Coast to confer with the Skouras Brothers and to install Leonard A. Woolams as vice president in charge of West Coast studio financing.

Tinker said: "This completes the executive personnel in the reorganization plan and I am highly enthusiastic about the future."

Comerford Buys Group of Oil Paintings Valued at $300,000

M. E. Comerford, Pennsylvania exhibitor elected a vice president at the recent M. P. T. O. A. convention, has purchased a collection of oil paintings depicting World War incidents, which is said to be valued at approximately $300,000.

Comerford is arranging for a permanent display of the pictures in Washington, where a building is being erected to house them. The pictures may be shown at the World's Fair in Chicago next year.

Marcin, Goldstone May Produce

Max Marcin plans to organize a producing unit with Phil Goldstone with the product to be released by Paramount. Emanuel Cohen is said to be opposed to the plan but the executive board is in favor due to Marcin's stage experience. If the deal is not completed, Marcin will become an independent producer.

SENATE HEARINGS START ON ADMISSION TAX BILL

Efforts Will Be Made Before Finance Committee to Raise Exemption from 45 Cents to 75 Cents or a Dollar

By F. L. BURT, Washington

Carrying a tax on all admissions in excess of 45 cents, the "billion dollar tax bill," passed by the House of Representatives on April 1, is now before the Senate, where an effort will be made to dispose of it within the next six weeks, in order that it may become a law before Congress adjourns or recesses about June 10 and give the Government the benefit of the full year's operation on which are based estimates for balancing the budget by June 30, 1933. Hearings started Wednesday in the Senate, where, before the finance committee, efforts will be made to raise the ticket tax exemption from 45 cents, as provided in the bill passed last week by the House, to 75 cents or to $1.

Ogden Mills, secretary of the treasury, was prepared to insist that a 10 per cent tax be levied against all admissions above 10 cents.

Possibilities that the Senate may add new levies or increase some of the rates now in the bill are seen in figures showing that a deficit ranging from $49,000,000 to $160,000,000 may be faced by the treasury at the close of the next fiscal year under the bill as passed by the House. Estimates of returns under the measure range from $956,900,000 to $991,900,000, the former being the figures of treasury experts and the latter those of the House ways and means committee. To the amount raised by the bill will be added the reductions to be made in Government expenditures, put at $200,000,000 by the committee, but $125,000,000 by the treasury.

Little Debate in House

The increase in the admission tax exemption from the 24 cents originally carried in the bill to 45 cents, proposed by Acting Chairman Crisp of the ways and means committee, was accomplished without opposition and with but little debate.

Submitting the amendment for the committee, Representative Crisp explained that returns from the tax would be $50,000,000 less than under the original 24-cent exemption, but that "responsive to what they believed to be the will of the House in this respect, the committee has recommended to you this amendment, and we have sought the best we could to try to make up the revenue lost by the enlargement of the exemption price."

The amendment was given the support of Representative McCormack of Massachusetts, who explained that he had intended to ask for a 50-cent exemption, but had talked to representatives of the industry and "they are perfectly satisfied with the committee amendment."

"I think it is only fair to say," interjected Representative La Guardia of New York, "that we expect that the 50-cent movie houses will be sports enough to charge 50 cents, so that the Government can get the tax."

An effort by Representative Celler of New York to obtain a $3 exemption for the spoken drama was defeated, but a committee amendment was adopted subjecting to tax complimentary tickets which, if sold, would be subject to tax except in the case of children under 12 years of age and municipal officers on official business. The same provision would apply to cut price tickets.

The new admissions tax would become effective 15 days after enactment of the bill, but on July 1, 1934, the present exemption of $3 would be restored under another amendment written into the measure. It is estimated that $40,000,000 will be raised in the fiscal year beginning July 1 next.

Income and Special Taxes, Too

In addition to the admissions tax, the motion picture industry will be called upon to bear its share of the burden imposed upon the country generally by the income and special taxes provided by the bill. The changes in income and corporation taxes will become effective next year against 1932 income, but the new excise taxes, generally, will go into operation 15 days after enactment.

The bill increases the normal tax on individual income, with a maximum rate of 7 per cent; makes surtaxes begin at $6,000 instead of $10,000, and provides a maximum surtax rate of 40 per cent. Further, the individual exemptions are reduced from $1,500 to $1,000 for single persons and from $3,500 to $2,500 for heads of families, and the deduction for earned income is reduced to 12½ per cent.

The income tax rate on corporations is increased from 12 to 13½ per cent and a rate of 15 per cent is provided for consolidated returns, while the corporation exemption is reduced to $1,000 for concerns having net income of less than $10,000.

Other taxes will bear heavily upon the industry,-including the increase to 3 cents in the postage rate on first-class mail and the levies of 4 cents a gallon on lubricating oil, 5 and 10 cents on long-distance telephone calls and telegraph, cable and radio messages; 10 cents per $100 on capital stock and bond issues; 50 cents on each $500 on conveyances; 10 per cent on rentals of safety deposit boxes and vaults, and 3 per cent on passenger automobiles, 2 per cent on trucks and 1 per cent on accessories.

Fox Sells Its Laboratory in East to a Newly Formed Firm

The Fox Film Corporation has sold its laboratories at 441 West 55th street, New York, to De Luxe Laboratories, Inc., which has been organized by a syndicate headed by Alan Freedman, who becomes president of the new company. Freedman has been head of the Fox laboratories for 17 years.

The laboratory has a capacity of a half-billion feet a year and is equipped for color printing and 16 mm. work. The syndicate has leased the quarters from Fox, a part of the contract being a 10-year printing franchise from Fox to the new company.

Doubt Hays Office Activity on Zoning Until Courts Act

Little likelihood of large distributors deviating from their announced policy of refusing to participate in zoning or protection conferences with exhibitors prior to the settlement of pending law suits based on enforcement of protection regulations, is seen by spokesmen for the Hays office.

It was reported at Philadelphia this week that the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware had requested the Hays office to name distributors' representatives to confer with exhibitors in the territory represented on some form of zoning agreement. The exhibitors' organization, according to the report, seeks the establishment of zoning regulations prior to the new selling season in order that they may be incorporated in the new contracts. The organization is said to favor the tentative zoning plan agreed on for the territory a year ago.

"I have not seen a formal request from the Pennsylvania exhibitor organization," said Dave Palfreyman of the MPPDA. "However, the position of the distributors has not changed since last Fall when they announced that they would not participate in further zoning conferences until pending law suits have been settled. To do so, even at the invitation of exhibitors, might serve only to bring on new law suits."

Palfreyman's reference was to the suit pending in Nebraska attacking the legality of protection. It was brought by W. N. Youngclaus, a Madison, Neb., exhibitor, and involves the Hays Office and large distributors. Palfreyman indicated, however, that he would like to see enough requests for distributor-participation in zoning conferences made "to influence the distributors to change their stand" as announced last Fall.

"The only solution of protection and zoning problems," he said, "is in joint agreements between exhibitors and distributors."

Theatre Owners of France Protest Tax in Day Strike

A nationwide 24-hour strike on Tuesday, in protest against the failure of the government to reduce amusement taxes, left France without an open place of amusement. Theatres, "legitimate" and motion picture; music halls, cabarets and circuses throughout the country padlocked their doors conspicuously, and Parisian "night-life" for once was blighted. Only the two state-supported theatres, the Opera Comique and the Odeon, were open in Paris on Tuesday.

Approximately 3200 theatres throughout the country joined in the protest, of which 300 amusement centers were located in Paris. The strike was called after certain government concessions had been made to the theatre owners, in order to avert a strike of longer duration. However, the compromise was not considered entirely satisfactory by the theatre owners, and they continue to demand further reduction in taxation. Estimates placed the government's loss in revenue for the day at approximately 1,000,000 francs ($39,400).

THE CAMERA REPORTS

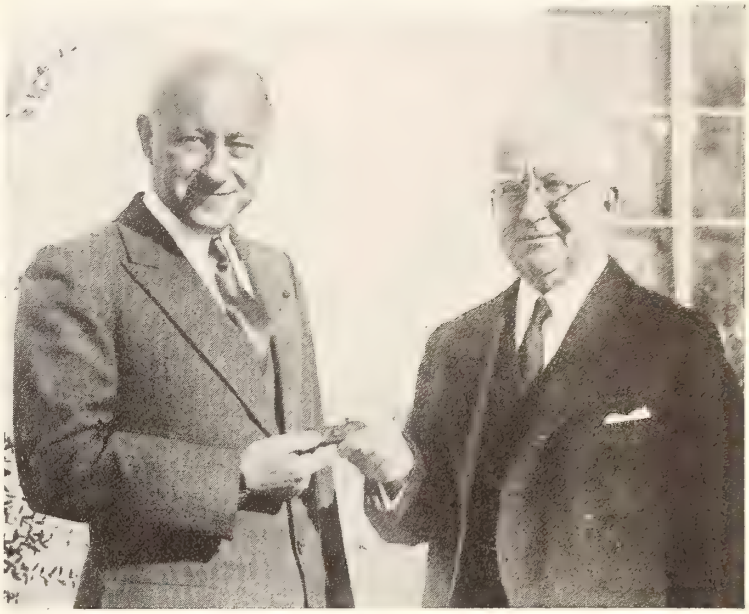
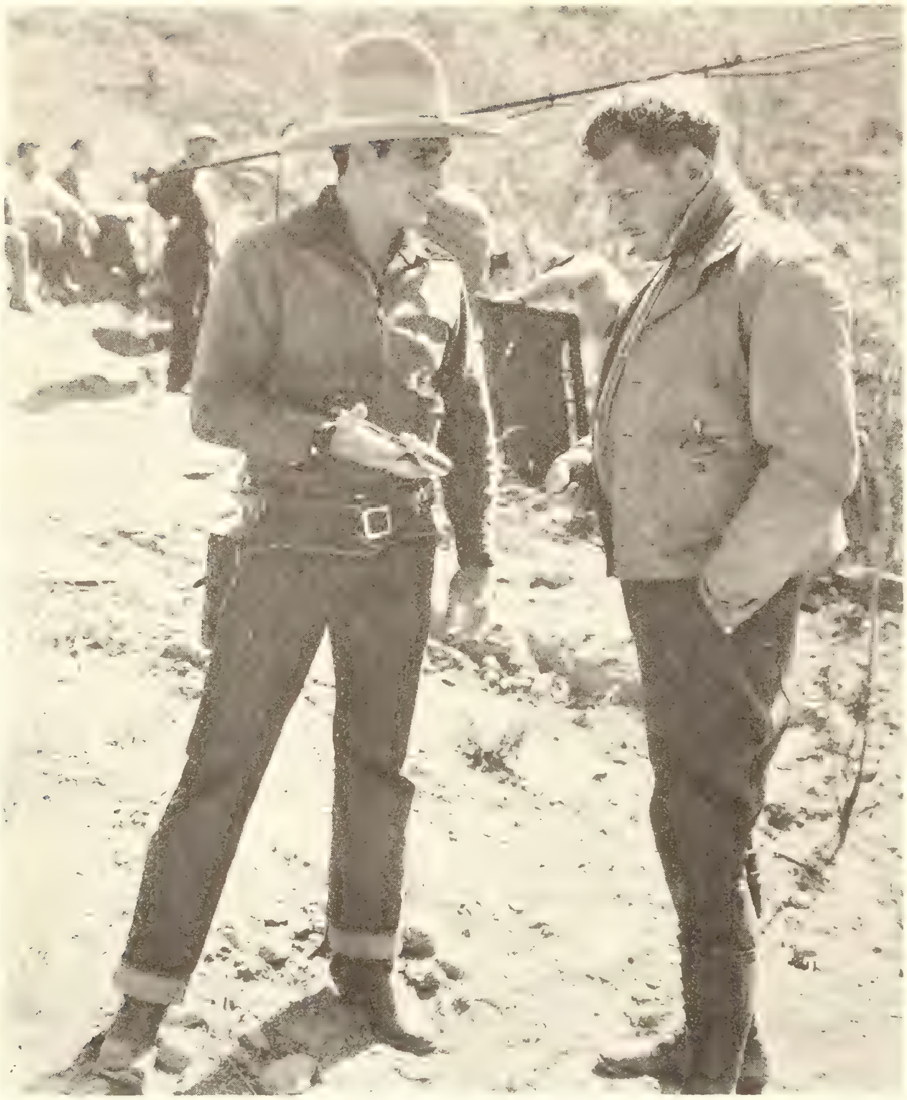
IN CONFERENCE. Looking forward to the independent production program for the season of 1932-33. At Monogram Pictures' headquarters while President W. Ray Johnston signs M. H. Hoffman for the production of six.



OPENING RELIGIOUS CENTER. Cecil B. DeMille, noted motion picture director, handing Dr. J. Lewis Gillies, Methodist leader, the keys to new home of Protestant, Catholic and Jewish social groups in Los Angeles. [Acme]

AT THE EASTERN END. Of the 3,000-mile American film business trail. Among those completing it the other day was Jimmy Durante, M-G-M comedian, here shown arriving in New York with Mrs. Durante.

ANOTHER ARRIVAL. James Cagney, Warner Brothers vigorous young star (ask his recent feminine leads!), as he arrived in New York for a business-with-pleasure vacation to include a visit to the stage play, "Blessed Event," his vehicle.



FATHER AND SON. Here are Bob Steele, Western star, and his father, R. N. Bradbury, who is putting Bob through the paces in the Sono Art-World Wide production, "Riders of the Desert."

RECRUIT. Arriving in Hollywood to go into pictures. She is Helen Vinson, stage player (well known for her role in "Death Takes a Holiday"), who has been placed under contract by Warner Brothers.

SIGNED. Miriam Seegar, who has been engaged by Tiffany for one of the romantic leads in that company's production of "Strangers of the Evening."

PASTORAL. A California countryside in an unusual camera study that proves again the poetry of the well manipulated lens, which here achieves a landscape worthy of the brush as it surveys a breeze-swept hilltop in the California sheep country. Gamboling a bit, too, is Joan Blondell, Warner Brothers' new star.

Allied Unit Adopts Plan of Al Steffes

The Allied Theatre Owners of Minnesota, North and South Dakota at Minneapolis, have adopted without opposition the plan of Al Steffes for reorganization. A new board of 10 instead of 30 now governs the local Allied unit with Max Toredor, Oscar Woemper and Steffes representing Minneapolis; Otto Raths, A. A. Kaplan and George Carish, St. Paul; B. Benfield of Morris, Upstate; H. J. Ludke of St. Peter, Minnesota; John Pillar of Valley City, N. D., and Benny Berger of Sioux Falls, S. D.

Elections by the board were Otto Raths, president; B. Benfield, vice-president; A. A. Kaplan, secretary; Max Toredor, treasurer, and Al Steffes, general manager.

MGM was censured for encouraging opposition to existing theatres and selling to proposed houses instead of those now existing. Resolutions supporting the Brookhart bill authorizing a test suit on protection, demand of RCA and DeForest for Minneapolis service depots, opposition to double features and threatened closing of houses if existing contracts are not modified, were all passed at the meeting.

Skouras To Retain Fox Coast Houses

There will be no disposition by the Skouras Brothers of any Fox West Coast theatres, it was definitely announced in a statement issued by the two brothers in San Francisco last week on their swing up the coast.

In fact, it was added, no changes, at least in local personnel will be made. They said that unusually friendly and happy connections have been established with the Fox interests.

Charles Skouras indicated that he would make permanent headquarters in California, probably Los Angeles, and that Spyros Skouras would return East on the completion of their survey.

Skirboll is Sales Head at Principal

Joseph Skirboll has been named sales manager of the recently established Principal Distributing Corporation, of which Sol Lesser is president and Frank Wilson vice president. Lesser has left for the Coast folowing the completion of the organization details in New York.

Ira Simmons, for the past year Talking Picture Epics general sales manager, has become associated in the ownership of the franchise of the Principal exchange in the metropolitan New York district, with Lesser and Wilson. It will handle Principal releases as well as Talking Picture Epics product for 1932-33. The 12 features which Principal will distribute will be made by outside producers, according to Lesser. Wilson's firm, Talking Picture Epics, was taken over by Principal when it was organized.

REALIGNMENT OF SALES FORCES MADE BY RADIO

W. R. Rothacker Appointed Supervisor of Business Activities in Hollywood; Franklin Slated for a Vice-Presidency

RKO this week completed the reorganization of its sales division. Announcement of numerous changes and promotions in the distribution branch preceded the appointment of Watterson R. Rothacker to supervisor of business activities in Hollywood. Rothacker, recently sent to Hollywood by President Hiram S. Brown to make a survey, took "full charge of business administration" at the studio on Wednesday. The appointment leaves David O. Selznick "free to devote his full time and energy to production," according to an announcement from the home office in New York.

Rothacker will continue his studio survey, it was announced by B. B. Kahane, vice-president, now in Hollywood, and on its completion may undertake a similar survey abroad. RKO expects him to visit New York soon for a home office conference.

Franklin Slated Vice-President

A meeting of the board of directors of RKO, scheduled for Wednesday, was postponed until next week because of the absence from New York of Owen D. Young. Harold B. Franklin is slated for election to a vice-presidency when the board meets.

The corporation still has under advisement a proposal to divide the RKO circuit into six territorial divisions, with a divisional operator in each.

Arnold Van Lear and William Adler resigned from the home office publicity department, effective immediately.

Charles Freeman, former head of the RKO booking office, has been relieved of that position by Franklin. Freeman, now on his vacation, from which he will return in twelve days, will probably be assigned to a different department.

Martin Beck, head of RKO vaudeville activities, disclaimed responsibility for Freeman's removal. "Freeman's transfer would be in the jurisdiction of the business department," Beck said.

Radio Reorganizes Sales Staff

Jules Levy, recently named general sales manager of RKO Radio Pictures, has completed the reorganization of the sales personnel. In all cases, the appointments made by Levy have been from within the ranks of the RKO organization, a policy which will be continued, the company has announced.

Cresson E. Smith, western sales manager, receives the added duties of the southern division, becoming western and southern sales manager. Smith left the home office this week for a trip through his territory. E. L. McEvoy becomes eastern sales manager.

Al Mertz, for five years RKO Radio branch manager at Cleveland, has been promoted to short subject sales manager. Harris A. Silverberg, salesman and previously Pathe manager in Detroit, succeeds Mertz in Cleveland. Smith, McEvoy and Mertz will make their headquarters in New York.

Three district managers will be associated with Smith, as follows: Walter E. Branson, formerly Chicago branch manager, has been promoted to Midwest district manager covering Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Sioux Falls, Omaha, Des Moines, St. Louis and Kansas City. He will make his headquarters in Chicago. Jack Oserman, formerly country sales representative at Chicago, succeeds Branson at Chicago. W. E. Callaway, formerly southern special sales representative, becomes southern district sales manager covering Dallas, Oklahoma City, Memphis, New Orleans, Charlotte, Atlanta and Jacksonville, with headquarters in Dallas. Harry C. Cohen continues as western division district manager, covering Los Angeles, Denver, Seattle, Salt Lake Oity, Portland and San Francisco, with headquarters in Los Angeles.

Leo M. Devaney becomes general manager for RKO in Canada, succeeding Percy C. Taylor, resigned. Devaney, for the past two years, has been general RKO Theatre executive in Canada, and was previously in the distribution field as special sales representative for Universal and Fox in Canada.

Joseph M. Franklin, manager of the Capitol, at Ottawa is appointed general manager for Canada of RKO Canadian theatre interests with headquarters at Toronto, in succession to Devaney. Franklin has had wide experience at Ottawa, Halifax, Montreal and Fort William. He will direct the Radio Keith Orpheum chain, associated with Famous Players Canadian.

L. I. Kutinsky and Phil Hodes are transferred from the home office to the New York exchange. Kutinsky, special home offce sales representative, will devote his time to special selling in New Jersey, making his headquarters at the New York exchange. Hodes, who has been head of the home office contract department, becomes New York and New Jersey sales manager under Robert Wolff, New York exchange manager. A. M. Avery, special sales representative in Dallas, is promoted to manager of the Omaha exchange, succeeding W. W. Brumberg, resigned.

The branch office personnel under the reorganization is as follows:

H. C. Cohen, western district manager in charge of the following branches: Los Angeles, J. H. McIntyre; Denver, J. H. Ashby; Seattle, E. A. Lamb; Salt Lake City, T. J. Walsh; Portland, M. E. Cory, and San Francisco, G. Wm. Wolf.

W. E. Callaway, southern district manager, in charge of the following branch offices: Dallas, L. E. Harrington; Oklahoma City, R. B. Williams; Memphis, P. M. Baker; New Orleans, G. C. Brown; Charlotte, R. C. Price; Atlanta, C. W. Allen, and Jacksonville, H. M. Lyons.

W. E. Branson, midwestern district manager in charge of the following branch offices: Chicago, Jack Osserman; Milwaukee, A. N. Schmitz; Minneapolis, M. J. Frisch; Sioux Falls, S. W. Fitch; Omaha, A. M. Avery; Des Moines, B. J. McCarthy; St. Louis, R. V. Nolan, and Kansas City, T. R. Thompson.

E. L. McEvoy, eastern division manager, which also includes the Canadian division, in charge of the following offices: Albany, C. R. Halligan; Boston, R. C. Cropper; Buffalo, H. T. Dixon; Detroit, Nat Levy; Indianapolis, R. E. Churchill; New Haven, B. Pitkin; New York, R. S. Wolff; Philadelphia, Sam Rosen; Pittsburgh, H. J. Michalson, and Washington, F. L. McNamee; Cincinnati, S. C. Jacques; Cleveland, Harris Silverberg.

Leo M. Devaney, general manager of the Canadian division under E. L. McEvoy, in charge of the following branches: Calgary, V. Dixon; Montreal, E. H. Wells; St. John, A. L. Gaudet; Toronto, J. Allen; Vancouver, W. S. Jones; Winnipeg, S. H. Decker.

HOLDOVER MENTIONED IN REVISED MEASURE

Damages for Unauthorized Showing of Picture $150 to $10,000 in Second Draft of Sirovich Bill in House

A second revision of the copyright bill has been filed with the House of Representatives at Washington by Congressman Sirovich of New York, chairman of the patents committee, to meet objections voiced during recent hearings on the legislation, when motion picture interests disagreed as to the penalty provisions of the measure.

For the first time, specific provision for penalty for unauthorized exhibition of motion pictures is made in the bill, it being provided that, among the remedies of the copyright owner "in the case of an unauthorized public presentation of a dramatic or dramatico-musical work, or the unauthorized exhibition of a motion picture, the infringer shall pay, in lieu of the remedies provided for in subsection (b) and (c) hereof, such statutory damages as the court may deem just, but such statutory damages shall not exceed the total sum of $10,000 nor be less than $150. The recovery provided by this subsection shall be at the option of the complainant exercised at any time prior to the conclusion of the trial upon the merits."

The two subsections referred to gave the copyright owner the option of recovering damages or such part of the profits of the infringer as may justly be attributed to the infringement, providing that where the infringer establishes he has acted in good faith recovery shall be limited to an amount which will justly compensate the owner for the use made of the copyright, in the setting of which the prices currently paid for similar rights shall be considered, and fixing the statutory damage limits at $5,000 and $100.

The provisions of the bill exempting certain activities from prosecution for infringement, among them the performance, delivery or other presentation of a copyright work which is neither public nor for profit, have been amended so as not to apply to motion picture exhibitions.

"Obnoxious," Says Myers

On Wednesday, Chairman Abram F. Myers, of Allied States, made known the text of a communication which he forwarded earlier in the week to Representative Sirovich regarding the copyright measure. Myers' letter stated:

"I have just succeeded in obtaining a copy of the bill, introduced by you on March 30 and reported out by the committee. The impression I get from a study of the bill is quite different from that gained from your description of the bill over the telephone.

"This is without doubt the most obnoxious bill from the standpoint of the independent motion picture theatre owners that has ever been proposed. It not only ignores the suggestions made in behalf of the independent theatre owners, but omits the slight concessions made to the theatre owners in your former bill.

"More than that, the bill contains language designed to have a bearing on the existing controversy between the exhibitors and the distributors, now pending before the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, as to whether the holding over of a picture beyond the term of an exhibition contract constitutes an infringement of the copyright on such picture.

"Finally, the bill for the first time singles out the theatre owners for prejudicial and discriminatory treatment by denying to them rights accorded to others charged with infringement and making them subject to penalties not imposed on other classes of persons.

"This subject may be treated under three heads: The first dealing with unfair provisions that have been added in the bill; the second dealing with omissions from the bill; and the third containing specific suggestions."

At this point, Myers listed a lengthy series of objections and suggested changes to Sirovich's bill in its present form.

Warner Club Offers Employee Benefits

The Warner Club, hitherto confined more or less to activities of the New York office, is now operating on a much broadened scale. To its social activities have been added numerous benefits, which are offered to all full-time Warner employees. Social activities will be widened as well. Included will be sick benefits and financial aid at the time of death, marriage or birth in a member's family. Plans for an old age pension are now being worked out. A special fund, known as the Warner Club Benevolent Fund, is being set aside by the Warner Club to be used as an aid to members in time of need.

Starting May 1, the following benefits will become effective:

Death Benefit—Each member shall be entitled to designate a beneficiary who will receive the sum of $250 upon the death of that member.

Sick Benefit—Each member shall receive the sum of $10 per week for each full week that he is sick and incapable of working, excluding the first two weeks, providing that the sum received by the member shall not be in excess of the member's weekly salary and shall not be for more than 10 consecutive weeks. No member shall receive more than $350 in any one year. This benefit becomes effective 30 days after a member joins the club.

Doctors and Nurses—Medical attention and the services of registered nurses are being arranged.

Marriage—All members in good standing for at least three months will receive the sum of $50 upon marriage.

Births—Any married member in good standing for at least three months will receive the sum of $50 upon the birth of a baby.

Pensions — Arrangements are being made whereby pensions will be paid to Warner Club members based upon a certain age and upon certain years of service to the company.

Legal Aid—Legal aid and advice will be furnished to the members.

Ford Film Called Bold Move to Get Free Screen Space

Branded by Advertising Age as "a bold effort to secure free space in the country's motion picture theatres," Henry Ford's vast interests this week began to capitalize on a nationwide campaign launched last week to induce exhibitors to show a short talking film depicting the new Ford Motor line of four and eight-cylinder automobiles. Wires were sent out from Detroit by the Metropolitan Motion Picture Company, the distributors, to leaders of state exhibitor associations, urging them to advise their theatre members to use the new Ford film to "help the return to prosperity." In this manner, it was hoped by the auto concern, the theatres would not question this so called "bold effort" to use the nation's screens as a free advertising medium for the Ford products. The only payment known was one made to exhibitors of Kansas City. Evidently not satisfied with the Ford prosperity alibi for showing the reel, Jay Means, president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas City, agreed to tie in member theatres in the campaign only after he effected a deal whereby his association will obtain "considerable revenue." Three hundred theatres are involved. Payment will be made directly by the Ford Motor Company.

In the meantime, it is understood that in many sections of the country the reel is being "subtly" sandwiched-in between regular newsreel sequences.

Ford's reel runs 240 feet and is sound-on-film, RCA Photophone system. Its reputed release to 6,000 theatres of the country is an echo of last year's sponsored reel troubles which ended only after leading distributors abandoned all hopes of trying to break into independent theatres with advertising reels which they had made for various national merchandisers.

Fox Companies Settle Controversy with Rogers

The long-pending controversy between Saul E. Rogers and the Fox corporations was settled at a meeting of the board of directors Monday. Rogers, who was vice president and head of the legal department, had started suit against the company, charging breach of contract. Fox Film and Fox Theatres Corporation each assumed a share of the settlement obligation and Rogers agreed to withdraw his legal action.

RKO Cancels Dual Run for "Symphony"; to Play Gaiety

Due to the strike of sign painters in New York, which would delay the completion of an elaborate electrical display and theatre signs planned by RKO for the Broadway run, Fannie Hurst's "Symphony of Six Million" engagement will be confined to the Gaiety theatre exclusively, instead of two houses as originally intended.

Jack Gardner in Agency

Jack E. Gardner has returned to the agency business on the Coast in association with Frank V. Vincent and Martin Broones.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Working day and night in eight-hour shifts for six days, three teams this week completed in Hollywood a "royal Hawaiian feather wardrobe" for Dolores Del Rio, for wear in "The Bird of Paradise." There are supposed to be only three genuine Hawaiian feather cloaks in the entire United States and RKO boasts widely of the fact that they are valued at $1,000,000 apiece. It would not be surprising, therefore, to read this entry in the company's next annual consolidated balance sheet: "ASSETS—One (1) Genuine Royal Hawaiian Feather Wardrobe, $1,000,000."

New-fangled time saving devices probably saved the corporation considerable during construction of the feather raiment. We are told that it took primitive Hawaiians 100 years to make a feather cloak, while RKO's efficient workmen completed the job in a mere six days.

John E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research, has come to the rescue of the sound motion picture, supplying it with a high-sounding technical name which it has never possessed. In the scientific world, the art or process of communicating by telephone is called "telephony," and Otterson seeks to christen our talking pictures the science of "postephony." This might be advisable if the term is confined solely to technical circles, but we dread the results if it finds its way into the exhibition field. Imagine the thoughts of an exhibitor during a bitter battle with a film salesman over the rentals for a new group of postePHONIES!

Those in the industry who are sufficiently interested may obtain copies of the new business census report from the Department of Commerce at Washington. But Secretary R. P. This refusal of the United States Government to honor silver pieces of its own issue when they have been worn thin strikes us as being at least a little humorous after having heard that nothing less than $1,250,000,000—mostly in nickels and dimes—is needed to balance the Federal budget. Secretary Lamont's announcement might also discourage the anti-hoarders who are trying to help Hoover to bring back to circulation some of those shiny silver coins which are stored in the kitchen stove.

THE story of the late Woodrow Wilson's fondness for mystery stories, which is credited with having done more than any other single factor to popularize that type of fiction, is now being branded as the fabrication of an enterprising press agent for a large New York publishing house which found itself overloaded with detective yarns. President Wilson, say those who claim to know what his reading habits were, probably read fewer than a half-dozen mystery stories during his lifetime. Compared to his reading of historical, philosophical and scientific volumes the number, in any event, is said to have been insignificant. This fact, however, did not deter the press agent who, learning that the war-time president had read at least some such volumes, gave his own interpretation of the facts to an interested public. The results are well known by now. It started a wave of popularity for the mystery novel which lasted several years and brought millions of dollars into the coffers of publishers of fiction and book dealers, to say nothing of motion picture producers.

The first big job of Robert F. Sisk, RKO's new public relations director, is to reorganize the many advertising and publicity divisions of theatre, vaudeville and picture units, so as to "eliminate waste, effort and duplication," and, according to the company, in this respect Sisk is consolidating the theatre and picture departments under S. Barrett McCormick in order that the "preparation of advertising copy will be one instead of two operations." RKO executives had this in mind when the consolidation of Radio and Pathe was effected last year. Its consummation will complete the physical merging of production, distribution and home office departments.

An exploitation stunt staged the other day on the West Coast injected a bit of humor into the merchandising of the weird and otherwise humorless "Dracula." The manager of the house tied up with a local merchant and, along with other stunts, erected a somewhat gruesome lobby display of "Dracula" in all of his diabolical glory, standing with hands dripping blood over the form of Helen Chandler, who lay sleeping. The message of morbidity and mystery would have been most effective if one didn't read the caption, supposedly coming from "Dracula," which says: "Ah, the beauty slumbers. . . . I cannot awaken her. . . . She must be sleeping on an Ostermoor mattress."

The circle also shows the comparative intake of the theatres of each of the 16 cities in terms of percentage of the total intake of all combined.

Eastman Bequests Total $20,000,00

The will of the late George Eastman, who ended his life on March 14, was filed for probate in Rochester on Monday, distributing an estate valued by his attorneys at $20,000,000. The figure is considered but a mere fraction of the fortune he once possessed, since the gifts he lavishly dispensed during his lifetime, are estimated to have totaled approximately $75,000,000.

The University of Rochester is the recipient of the bulk of the estate, the institution also having received $35,000,000 while he lived. The university proper received $12,000,000 and in addition, a bequest of $2,500,000 to the Eastman School of Music.

The codicil which Mr. Eastman signed just prior to his death, eliminated from the will Cornell University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and the Rochester Young Women's Christian Association. The largest personal bequest was to a niece, Mrs. Ellen Andrus Dryden, Evanston, Ill., who received $200,000. To each of her two children Mr. Eastman bequeathed the income from $100,000. Mr. Eastman's secretary for many years, Mrs. Alice K. Hutchison, will receive $100,000.

Eastman Kodak of New Jersey Net for Year is $13,408,785

A net profit of $13,408,785 is reported by Eastman Kodak Company of New Jersey and subsidiaries for the year ended December 26, 1931, after depreciation and federal taxes. This figure is equivalent to $5.78 a share on 2,225,965 shares of common stock outstanding at the end of the year, after deduction of 6 six per cent preferred dividends. This compares with net for years ended December 27, 1930, of $20,353,788, or $8.84 a share on 2,261,030 common shares.

A. F. Sulzer has been elected a director of the Eastman Kodak Company.

Screen Guild New Production Group Headed by Levee

A new plan of cooperative production on the Coast, with stars, directors and other creative talent participating, has been organized under the name Screen Guild, with M. C. Levee, president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, as president. He recently resigned as business manager of the Paramount studio, and has had a long career in the film industry.

Negotiations are already under way for release of the Screen Guild product through United Artists. The headquarters of the new organization is at the Metropolitan Studio in Hollywood.

Finance and management of the Guild's activity will be vested in a board of directors and an advisory council which Levee says will include many picture "names." No matter where their connections may be, the advice and counsel of these people will be available to those making Screen Guild pictures, he added. Among those who already have pledged their active support and interest, said Levee, are Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Cecil B. De Mille, Frank Lloyd, George Fitzmaurice, Benjamin Glazer, Howard J. Green and others.

The guild idea also will be carried out in financing production and sharing in the profits. Levee said the Guild would finance and manage production and "retain a moderate share in the profits," but that the major portion of the profits would go to those actively engaged in creating each production.

Each Guild production will become an investment trust, Levee said, with funds to be administered through the trust department of the Bank of America, of which Dr. A. H. Gianinni is chairman of the board. The Guild will charge no interest or cash bonuses of any kind for the use of its funds in the financing of Guild productions, Levee declared, but will derive its profit from its share of the proceeds received through distribution.

Stars, players, directors, authors, cameramen and other artists connected with productions will receive the full amount of their current salary ratings, part of which will be payable in cash and part in participation trust certificates. All returns from the distribution of the pictures will be paid to the Bank of America, and the bank will distribute the funds to those concerned. First, the Guild will be reimbursed for its actual cash outlay, then all participating trust certificates will share in such proportion as each bears to the total number issued in the case of each production. After the trust certificates covering salary shares are paid off in this manner, the Guild and the participating artists will share in the profits.

BRITISH TAX REDUCES ATTENDANCE AT RATE OF 150 MILLIONS A YEAR

Narrow Margins of Profit Have Been Converted Into Heavy Losses in Scores of Instances, Protest Meeting Is Informed

Box Office Intake Has Dropped 15½ Per Cent in Twelve Weeks, Recent Returns From 1,204 Theatre Men Indicate

By WM. H. MOORING, London

Mass meetings of British exhibitors have been held all over the country in protest against the new scale of entertainments tax instituted under the emergency budget of last year, and operative from November last.

At a crowded initial protest meeting held in London, Tom Ormiston, M. P., who is Treasurer of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, presented the case prepared by his organization and laid before the chancellor of the exchequer.

This case was based on returns from 1,204 exhibitor members of the CEA, showing the exact effect of the increase in tax. In scores of instances it proved clearly that narrow margins of profit had been converted by the new scale of taxation into heavy losses.

It is unfortunate, though not as inconclusive as may at first appear, that of the 4,000 theatre owners operating in Britain, only 1,204 took the trouble to supply the CEA with returns showing their takings, and payments in tax, for the period from November last to January, with comparable figures covering the corresponding period of the previous year.

Decrease at 150,000,000 a Year

Based on the 1,204 returns which eventually did come to hand, the CEA case reveals that during the 12 weeks from November 9, 1931, to January 25, 1932, there was a decrease in attendances which would run to 150,000,000 a year, or 11.5 per cent of total annual attendances. Box offices takings had dropped by 15½ per cent, and the total loss per annum was computed at four million pounds.

During the period the increased amount the treasury drew from the entertainments tax amounted to 36.8 per cent, which equals £2,000,000 a year. Seats selling at from 8d. to 1/3d showed a decrease of 18 per cent in values; those from ¼d showed a decrease of 22.8 per cent, demonstrating that not only have total cinema attendances declined, but there has been a marked tendency for the public to favor the lower priced seats in preference to the medium and higher priced ones, with resultantly higher effect on takings than on admissions.

Hundreds of country exhibitors made the journey to London especially to state their own cases, and some terrible stories of hardship in the industrial areas, where unemployment is shockingly bad at present, were accompanied by figures proving that unless the chancellor is prepared immediately to concede the tax which was placed by the new scale upon seats up to 6d (previously untaxed), many of the theatres in country areas will have to close down.

Typical of many cases mentioned was that in which four theatres operating in an industrial district, where 8d represented the highest priced seat, had dropped no fewer than 30,000 admissions in three months. Takings had dropped by £1,950 and contributions in tax had gone up by £846.

The meeting unanimously endorsed a resolution calling upon the chancellor of the exchequer to remove the tax on the seats up to and including 6d.

If American exhibitors now faced with a possible tax on the same principle as that operated in Britain will take the tip, they will be united in their fight against the imposition. For it has to be remembered that the entertainments tax in Britain was started during the war when the minister responsible gave promise that it would be taken off immediately on the cessation of hostilities.

A slight reduction was effected in 1924—six years after the war ended—and further reductions were promised at the earliest opportunity. Then when the financial crisis arose, the first thought of the chancellor was to increase the tax, making every seat liable to tax at an over-all rate of 16½ per cent of turnover. This coincided with drastic cuts in unemployment benefits and general wage standards, with the result that a first-rate crisis is precipitated in the cinema industry and losses inflicted which will pass on to the same chancellor a reduced claim to income taxation of no less than 3¼ million pounds for the year!

British Cinema Building Society

An imposing plan under which a chain of theatres is likely to be put up on the building society principle has just been evolved in London. The idea is that a society shall arrange loans to realize cinema plans in approved areas, the promoters making payment on the rent purchase system.

Various building, equipment and furnishing firms have been induced to enter the proposal, so that halls may be erected on the mass production principle with these firms supplying all the goods at low rates on standardized patterns. It is reckoned that each theatre—based on 800 seating capacity—will cost around £12,000.

Several leading London architects are on the board of the new concern, which has appointed an advisory committee of experts in every department.

Of special interest is the fact that each of these theatres will be fitted with an entirely novel type of screen. This consists of a plate glass mirror, projection being from the rear onto a flat white surface on the ceiling, from which point it is reflected into the mirror placed in the normal screen position.

Practical demonstration (which I have witnessed) appears to substantiate the inventor's claim that this will not only save cost but will eliminate distortion, and insure a perfectly square-on view from any position in the theatre. Doctor R. T. A. Innes is the inventor.

The president of the British Cinema Building Society is Alfred S. G. Woodger, and the directors include Lt. Col. Ernest A. Ewart, F. S. Henniker, Wm. F. Granger, Noel F. Smith and Wm. M. Campbell.

From Here and There

Chaliapin, the great opera tenor, is to play a star role in a new £80,000 film to be produced in London in French and English. Paul Morand has written the script, which is based on "Don Quixote." Jean de Limur will direct.

Jeffrey Bernard of W and F, returned from New York, declares that America is warming to British pictures and that it needs only one big Broadway smash to set up an irresistible public demand.

The British film industry is considering at last the ideas often advocated that a Central Publicity Bureau should be set up to defend the industry against the active anti-cinema propaganda which is now affecting very seriously the attitude of local licensing and other official bodies with powers over cinema interest.

Randolph Richards has succeeded R. V. Crow as president of the British CEA. His first presidential speech aroused bitter resentment among American executives here, because he referred to certain RKS matters and brought in the name of George "Shylock" Washington. It was a joke which misfired.

"Jekyll and Hyde" leaves the London Carlton after six weeks' fair to good business only. It is followed by "Shanghai Express," which is expected to clean up on current interest in the Chinese-Japanese bother.

Famed "101" Under Auctioneer's Gavel

Col. Zack Miller bowed his shotgun this week to the auctioneer's gavel and thus ended the famous "101 Ranch" and "Wild West Circus." Ex-Cowboys Will Rogers and Tom Mix are two of the many famed show personages who got their start there, out in the Indian country of Oklahoma, where in 1879 Col. George W. Miller founded the band which was later enlarged to include some 1,400 cowboys, cowgirls and Indian chiefs and squaws; 600 horses and hundreds of animals, some wild, all wooley.

Col. Miller's three sons, George, Joe and Zack succeeded him and Zack succeeded his two brothers after both were killed by accidents. Last summer, the show stranded outside of Washington and receivers and three foreclosure suits followed. Col. Zack, sick abed, then tried to defend the show against the auctioneer's gavel. He lost.

Paramount Publix Net Profits Total $6,345,488 in Year

Combined net profits of $6,345,488 for the year and a loss of $649,796 for the three months ended December 26, 1931, after deducting all charges and reserves for federal income taxes, are recorded by Paramount Publix Corporation in its consolidated report for the year 1931, which includes earnings of subsidiary companies.

The net profit for the year 1931 equals $2.02 a share and the loss for the fourth-quarter of 1931 equals 20 cents a share on the average number of shares outstanding during the year and the total outstanding at the end of the quarter.

For the fiscal year ended December 27, 1930, the corporation reported consolidated net income of $18,381,178, equal to $6.15 a share on the average number of shares outstanding during that period.

Foreign and Domestic Segregated

In presenting the balance sheet at the end of the 1931 fiscal period, the corporation departed from its usual custom by showing its assets and liabilities segregated as between domestic and foreign companies. This depicts the position of the corporation's foreign subsidiaries and the total amount invested abroad.

Assets of foreign companies, as of December 26, 1931, totaled $53,564,044, as compared with aggregate assets of the corporation of $298,304,108, or approximately 18 per cent of the corporation's total assets.

Consolidated current assets on December 26, 1931, totaled $37,732,542, including cash of $4,949,283 and accounts receivable amounting to $5,404,732. Current liabilities were $23,681,680. Net working capital was $14,050,861 and the ratio of current assets to current liabilities at the end of the period stood at 1.59 to 1.

Cash of foreign companies at the end of the fiscal period was $1,755,490 written down to the then existing rate of exchange in terms of dollars. With the appreciation in exchange, the cash of foreign companies in terms of dollars has increased materially since December 26, 1931.

A notation on the balance sheet reveals that the corporation has completely fulfilled all obligations remaining at the year end for the repurchase of its common stock under agreements made some years ago for the acquiring of properties and has no further obligations of any kind of this nature.

Gross profits of the corporation before depreciation and federal taxes amounted to $18,295,632 for 1931, as compared with $31,130,374 in 1930.

Special profits taken in the period amounted to $3,182,500, while extraordinary losses amounted to $2,150,000, resulting from abnormal British and Canadian exchange losses of $485,000 and provision for losses on investments of $1,655,000. Deducting $11,755,000 for depreciation of fixed assets and $195,145 for federal taxes left net profits of $6,345,488, carried to surplus.

The depreciation taken on fixed assets compares with $10.731,548 in 1930, or about $1,025,000 more than in the preceding year.

Earned surplus at December 26, 1931, amounted to $27,269,355, of which $5,889,778 was held by foreign companies.

Stockholders at the end of 1931 numbered approximately 30,500 as compared with 20,778 at the end of 1930, an increase of nearly 50 per cent.

Late last week Paramount Publix arranged with a group of New York, Philadelphia and Chicago banks for credit amounting to between $13,000,000 and $15,000,000 on six months notes renewable at the company's option for an additional six months. The new credit will be used to pay off present bank loans of $9,500,000 and for current working capital.

About 70 per cent of the loan was taken by the following New York banks: Bankers Trust Company, National City Bank, Commercial National Bank and Trust Company, Empire Trust Company, Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company, County Trust Company, and Chemical Bank and Trust Company.

De Casseres Views Broadway's Plays

Fever" through to victory. Splendid screen stuff for those who like quiet gayety and dialogue whittled to titters.

THEY DON'T MEAN ANY HARM

Charles Hopkins is a brave fellow. He puts on Milne no matter how heavy the sentimental drip, how cold or hot the weather, how smashing depressions or booms.

In "They Don't Mean Any Harm," Milne's late latest, there is a good idea imbedded in a barrel of molasses, a diamond stuck in a ton of soggy bread.

Some ultra-sophisticates (a rotten lot, except for one) take it into their heads "to do good" to a perfectly happy but poor family below. They have the daughter sent to Canada and the invalid mother to a nursing home, where she dies. The husband, a writer of infantile stories, is left alone. There is rough-edged satire here that Milne, as always, drowns in oceans of snivel.

As the writer of rubbish O. P. Heggie gave a beautifully convincing performance. I never like Heggie's parts, but the actor, in his case, is always above the part. Heggie could do something with this on the screen if the dialogue could be whipped around to a kind of pathetic farce-comedy.

PILL-DREAM OF A HIGHBROW

In my dream I built a moving picture house. It was built like an enclosed stadium. It was all marble and bronze. It seated exactly five hundred persons.

In it I produced all the great works of literature of all times. I put on the screen such exquisite things, with appropriate music, as Shelley's "The Witch of Atlas," Keats' "St. Agnes' Eve" and also Anatole France's "The Revolt of the Angels" and Cabell's "Jurgen."

The motto above the door was "The Public Be Damned!"

All seats were ten dollars apiece. No critic could get into the house. Morality was barred if it interfered with Art or Beauty.

Then I suddenly awoke and found I had still some dialogue to do on "Her Great Sacrifice."

DEVIL'S LOTTERY

Fox 75 minutes

A THOROUGHLY absorbing story well told and well acted, this production should hold most any audience's attention and interest right up to its weak but apparently satisfactory ending. Barbara Weeks will probably win more public approbation than does Elissa Landi. Somehow or other Miss Landi's efforts to gain a foothold on American audiences has not clicked so well, but since she contributes as good a performance as is possible with the tough part she drew in this production we can only admire her attempt to make more out of it than was possible.

The title is packed with many strong b.o. slants and ought to be built up to such proportions as to make certain a big opening for this picture. It can be played around with along the lines of stretching the imagination or it can be aimed directly at what that title and plot imply. When you stop to consider the few weak names you have for your marquee or advertising campaign, then it stands to reason that you must lean rather heavily on the title to get by. Victor McLaglen, Ralph Morgan, Beryl Mercer, Barbara Weeks and Alexander Kirkland may be slightly familiar to your particular community but we doubt whether individually or collectively they would make a deep impression. Audience reaction ought to be good. The story is well told and the characters contribute excellent performances in their respective parts. There is plenty of action, some good suspense and enough comedy to make it genuine entertainment. So you need not weaken in your campaign efforts to make this bring home something above average receipts. It should be able to do that much and more where smart showmanship is invoked and clever selling campaigns are worked out that will play upon the imagination of your prospective patrons.

It is best played away from Sunday and kid days but it is strong enough to stand up on its own feet for a healthy midweek run. Give this picture the benefit of a strong backing and sell it for what it is worth—and it is worth plenty if you can shout about it loudly enough.

SHOPWORN

Columbia 70 minutes

A WEAK story is made good solely by reason of the star's outstanding performance and charming personality. Miss Stanwyck rises to great heights in her portrayal of a character that called for more than many other present-day screen stars could possibly contribute. She deserves billing far above the title because you must sell Barbara Stanwyck above all else. The story is purely incidental (that's a charitable designation) and upon her shoulders falls the burden of making this acceptable screen fare. She delivers the goods—and how.

The title can possibly be made to mean a lot more than it does, by reason of good show-selling, especially through the medium of a strong newspaper advertising campaign. But promising them too much in the story may prove disappointing to your audience; on the other hand the playing up of Miss Stanwyck's fine work will make them look for that above everything else, in which case they scarcely can feel anything but satisfied with what they will see. To that star and title you can add such names as Regis Toomey, Zasu Pitts and a surrounding cast of far above average qualities.

"Audience value" is Miss Stanwyck from beginning to end. The plot of the story is so ancient that you can almost hear it creaking its way through scene after scene. But your audience probably will lose sight of the plot, just as we did, and settle down to enjoying a rare bit of grand acting.

It's n.g. for either the kids or the Sabbath day showings, but spotted elsewhere and sold properly, plus the word-of-mouth plugs for the star after the opening show, it should mean satisfying returns at the box office. You can insure against this one being a disappointment by giving it a strong advance campaign. They'll like it.

LADIES OF THE JURY

ALTHOUGH very weak in names you have in this picture one of the best laugh provokers we've seen in many weeks, so much so that we missed at least one-third of the dialogue because of the uproarious laughter of the audience at the Mayfair theatre. Edna May Oliver was never in better mettle and can be counted as one of the outstanding comediennes of the screen today.

The title has certain natural possibilities which ought to help make it sound attractive in your newspaper ads and exploitation. Considering the lack of "draw" names you must count on the title to get you over the hurdles—and we have a couple of hurdles every time we get a picture without some good marquee names. Ken Murray probably will mean nothing except in those few cities where he has something of a following among the vaudeville theatre patrons.

Your chief stock in trade after you get them in is the fact that they will laugh their heads off at the antics of Miss Oliver. She'll establish a murder trial precedent that will not be equaled for many a year and if your particular town or county allows women to serve on juries then this one will make the grade that much easier. Here in New York women have not reached that distinction of jury duty and so they can hardly appreciate some of the subtle humor, and this one is packed with subtle humor.

Taking the average picture backed up with a couple of strong names and putting it over to good returns is nothing to shout about. Anyone with even limited ability ought to be able to do that much. BUT taking a good picture without those much-needed names to help put it over, and backing it up with a kind of a selling campaign that will pull them into your theatre, that's showmanship spelled in capital letters. Those capable of accomplishing such a feat deserve a spot in the theatre hall of fame.

It's not suitable for children, but otherwise it can get by OK.

Here's a good picture. It's even better than good. But it needs smart selling to do business.

Devil's Lottery

(Fox)

Drama

The comedy, tragedy and general disturbance in the normal routine of people's lives which results from the sudden acquisition of large sums of money, forms the theme of this Fox adaptation of the novel by Nalbro Bartley.

A rather notable and earnest cast, headed by Elissa Landi, English author-actress, includes Victor McLaglen, Alexander Kirkland, Paul Cavanagh, Barbara Weeks, Beryl Mercer, among others.

The story is one which presents the always interesting situation of a group of people, diversified in character, background and ideas, thrown unexpectedly together. Much happens in a few days, including two deaths, one a murder; a nearly broken romance, and, we may understand, the restoration of self respect to one person and health to another, together.

Halliwell Hobbes, English lord, decides to gather for a week-end at his castle, the winners of the Calcutta Sweepstakes, based upon the results of a derby, won by Hobbes' horse. Together come: Miss Mercer, elderly English cockney, and frightened for her money; her son, McLaglen, broad-shouldered fighter, unused to castles; Miss Landi, once involved in social scandal; Cavanagh, her ne'er-do-well and parasatic attachment; Kirkland, American student, and his fiancee, Miss Weeks; Ralph Morgan, crippled ex-soldier, who had once danced with Miss Landi, years before.

With a deal of well-placed comedy, mostly centering about Miss Mercer and McLaglen, and incidentally supplied by Herbert Mundin as the cockney servant, things happen. McLaglen loses to Cavanagh at cards, and attempts, unseen to take the money from his mother while she is alone in her room. Startled, she hides in a closet, McLaglen escapes, and Miss Mercer is found dead the next morning. Accidental death is the verdict. McLaglen, finding the truth of the card game, returns, kills Cavanagh and is seen only by Morgan, who is paralyzed by shock. Kirkland is thought guilty.

It is straightened out in the end in interesting fashion, when the young couple, Miss Weeks and Kirkland, find each other, and Miss Landi, who carries a good part of the burden of the histrionic effort, decides to remain at the bedside of Morgan, who gathers sufficient strength to reveal the murderer.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Sam Taylor, from the novel by Nalbro Bartley. Screen play and dialogue by Guy Bolton. Photographed by Ernest Palmer. Sound, Joseph Aiken. Art, William Darling. Release date, March 27, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

Shopworn

(Paramount)

Drama

Barbara Stanwyck, attractive and ably sincere in her work, here offers a portrayal of a girl who fights to win a place and happiness for herself, and finally succeeds, after an obstinate and son-loving mother, aided and abbetted by a not too scrupulous friend, nearly succeeds in robbing her of that happiness.

The story, though hardly new in theme, or in treatment, seemed to hold the attention of a large audience at the New York Paramount.

Miss Stanwyck, following the death of her father in a blasting accident on a construction job, goes to live with Lucien Littlefield and Zasu Pitts, her aunt, where she becomes a waitress in a college town. The filmed blast which opened the film was generally considered a most unusual bit of photographic excellence.

Miss Stanwyck meets and falls in love, mutually, with Regis Toomey, medical student and wealthy, with a very much doting mother, Clara Blandick. When the two plan to be married the mother makes every effort to stop the marriage, and when Toomey will not listen to reason an old friend, Oscar Apfel, decoys Toomey away and has the girl committed to a reformatory as of immoral character. Toomey is deceived into believing she deserted him.

Six years pass, at the end of which time Miss Stanwyck appears as a much sought after actress of fame and wealth, to whom many men are paying court. Zasu Pitts is her maid, having left Littlefield. Miss Stanwyck meets Toomey at a party and almost literally throws him out. During a visit to the town where she met Toomey first, Miss Stanwyck is seated in the dining room of the hotel where Miss Blandick, Toomey and the elite of the town is gathered at a dinner. Disparaging comment on Miss Stanwyck leads Toomey to go to her. The mother makes one more attempt, unsuccessful, to keep the two apart, and a three-cornered reconciliation concludes the film.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Nicholas Grinde. Story by Sarah Y. Mason. Dialogue by Jo Swerling and Robert Riskin. Photographed by Joseph Walker. Sound, Glen Rominger. Film editor, Gene Havelick. Release date, March 25, 1932. Running time, 78 minutes.

Aren't We All

Paramount British

Glitter and Social Idlers

(Seen in London)

Harry Lachman has taken this trifling story by Frederick Lonsdale and with an elaborate embroidery has made it one of the most polished of recent British productions. He has "discovered" Gertrude Lawrence as a vital screen personality and has packed more camera novelty into the production than seems possible. A crazy night-club dive, complete with juggling Chinese for waiters and acrobatic surprises for all visitors, was exceptionally well received.

The story concerns a young couple (Gertrude Lawrence and Owen Nares) who are honeymooning on the Riviera; husband is recalled for urgent business; wife gets thoroughly bored and carries on a mild flirtation with an Austrian visitor, Von Eisen (Harold Huth). Half-afraid, she rushes back to London and finds her husband at a night club carrying on a flirtation with a young butterfly (Renee Gadd). They quarrel and sulk through the rest of the picture and only get together again on the final fade-out when Lord Grenham, the young man's father (Hugh Wakefield) helps them to patch matters up. Von Eisen has followed the girl to London, and her husband, learning of her flirtation on the Riviera, feels that they are about equal. So he accepts his father's suggestion that it is time to climb into her room by the balcony window, even if she has locked the door.

There are some good comedy situations with some excellent dialogue, chiefly given to Hugh Wakefield, who seemed worthy of a star part of his own. The settings are exquisite and camera treatment excellent. There is sparkle in every foot and the film moves with good speed, relying chiefly on dialogue.

Produced by Paramount British Productions. Distributed by Paramount Film Service. Directed by Harry Lachman. Story by Frederick Lonsdale. Adaptation by Gilbert Wakefield and Basil Mason. Running time, 79 minutes.

The Crooked Lady

M-G-M (Hakim)

Crook Drama

(Seen in London)

Captain James Kent comes from the war as just another man without a job. Accidentally coming across an old bat man, now a fairly successful member of a burglar gang, he is induced to join in the game. Being a man of culture, he is given the swell jobs, and while engaged in a country house jewel robbery, he is nearly run to earth by Joan Collinson (Ursula Jeans), a charming flapper detective from a private sleuth agency. Later he discovers that the jewels he stole included the wedding gift of an old army officer chum to his wife. Coincidence must have it that that very same officer chum once saved the life of Kent, and lost his own in the attempt.

Kent decides to cut crime, and as a preliminary he returns the stolen jewels and makes his confession. Then he takes his old bat man friend, and the two set up house in the country, where Kent blossoms as an author. Although he writes under a false name, one of his books goes too near to the details of one of his biggest crime jobs, and the police suspect him. With the same sweet girl detective the police chief visits the country house and is just in time to discover there Kent's old gangster chief, wanted for murder, just about to commit another. He has gone there to get Kent, but he is not allowed to succeed, because there had to be a happy ending with Kent and the girl-officer as chief parties to the marriage contract.

Though not attempted on grandiose lines, this film, made for Eric Hakim, at the Twickenham studios, was found more entertaining than his recent "Two White Arms." There is movement, and some very excellent dialogue. Austin Trevor as Kent, and Alexander Field as Slim, his bat man, were conceded to have put over some tip-top acting, and Field has some good comedy lines. Every foot of the way is action. This ought to interest American audiences, though hardly in the top line position.

Produced by Eric Hakim. Distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Leslie Hiscott. Story and dialogue by H. Fowler Mears. Photography by Basil Emmot. Running time, 77 minutes.

The Theft of the Mona Lisa

(Tobis)

Drama with Music

Tobis, in German, here offers the accurate story of the theft of the famed Leonardo da Vinci masterpiece from the Louvre at Paris, lightened with the introduction of music, vocally and as a background theme for the film as a whole. The picture is being shown to New York audiences at the intimate and small Europa, where capacity crowds are viewing it daily.

The director is Geza von Bolvary, who also handled the well known effort, "Zwei Herzen in ¾ Takt," and the touch of attractive musical accompaniment is again apparent.

Leading players are Willy Forst as the young Italian glazier living in Paris, who stole the art work; and Trude von Molo, as the hotel servant who very closely resembles the Mona Lisa, and with whom Forst falls in love. The resemblance of Miss Molo is truly effective and the spirited performances were well received by the audience.

Forst, glazier, is sent to change the glass on the Mona Lisa picture at the Louvre and becomes fascinated by the painted figure. He hears Miss Molo sing at her work in the hotel next door and falls in love with her. She returns the affection until she discovers he is not the wealthy artist he appeared, and then she drops him, in favor of Anton Pointner, a salesman. Seeking to impress her, he daringly steals the masterpiece, but she is not even slightly excited by the stupendous feat, leaving with the salesman. The police make no headway, but the agent of a millionaire, seeking to purchase the picture, finds the thief and offers him a tremendous sum for the picture, but Forst refuses. Placing the picture on the side of a hurdy-gurdy, he wheels it to Florence, Italy, and sells it to an antique dealer. There the agent tracks him and he is arrested.

Miss Molo reads of his arrest and appears at the trial, hoping that she will receive pleasurable notoriety. Seeing her there, however, Forst says he stole the picture for revenge upon Napoleon, who had stolen numerous works of art from Italy. The girl, thus rebuked, receives a sharp blow to her vanity, as Forst goes to jail, and the film concludes.

Produced and distributed by Tobis. Directed by Geza von Bolvary. Music composed by Robert Stolz. Scenario prepared by Walter Reisch. Release date, March 27, 1932. Running time, 92 minutes.

The Reckoning

Melodrama

A film which concerns itself for the most part with underworld doings, being rather melodramatic in treatment and following very closely along the lines of its type of filmed story.

James Murray and Sally Blane are responsible for the romantic angle of the yarn, supported by Edmund Breese, Bryant Washburn, Thomas Jackson, wherein are included some few names prominent at an earlier day of the motion picture. The film seemed fairly well to entertain an audience at a neighborhood house in New York.

Murray and Miss Blane are sweethearts in the realm of gangsters and she has every intention of changing her ways and going straight. She does her best to persuade Murray to tread the narrow path with her, but he is prevented by the inelegant but effective tactics of Breese, gang leader. The end comes suddenly when Breese, attempting to loot the safe of Miss Blane's millionaire employer, is halted by Murray and accidentally killed during the fight which follows.

Jackson, the detective, who has trailed Murray and Miss Blane, arrives in time to witness the affair, and he clears Murray. The latter decides to follow Miss Blane's advice and the two leave the picture together, more or less as expected.

Produced and distributed by Monogram. Directed by Harry Fraser. Story by Dwight Cummings. Adaptation and dialogue by Leon Lee. Release date, February 15, 1932. Running time, 63 minutes.

South Sea Adventures

(Principal)

Zane Grey, Fisherman

Herein a pictorial record of a super fishing trip, so to speak, in which Zane Grey, author, adventurer, fisherman, plays the title role, aboard his beautiful white yacht, "The Fisherman."

Against a background of unusual South Sea scenery, the author of western novels engages in the greatest fishing trip, we are told, of his varied career.

Grey and his crew voyage from Catalina, off the coast of California, southeast and then southwest into the South Seas, in all covering some 15,000 miles of water. He is after the deep sea game fish, the black marlin and the striped marlin, with incidental sharks, porpoises and the like hardly worthy of attention. In small launches the battle is waged, while the catch consists of an unusual sail fish, an even more unusual, and rather rare devil fish, which looks like a huge bat.

Incidentally are pictured the natives of the islands at which stops were made, and the strange manner of executing the annual trapping of fish by a certain group of island inhabitants. Captain Mitchell, Grey's ship captain, turns the tide on his chief by capturing a tremendous marlin after a desperate struggle. Grey, we are given to understand, is much dismayed, since he is unable to duplicate the performance. Rough weather sets in and the yacht turns back after many weeks, stopping en route at Tahiti. There at the last moment, Grey gets his fish, after an active, exciting battle. It is a rare striped marlin, larger than Captain Mitchel's catch, and the largest fish ever caught with rod and reel in the history of fishing.

Attendant dialogue was prepared by Tom Geraghty and is rendered by Wedgwood Kowell. The photographic work was rated excellent. The film is a fisherman's adventure on the grand scale.

Produced and distributed by Principal Distributing Corporation. Spoken by Wedgwood Kowell. Narrative written by Tom J. Geraghty. Edited by Carl Himm. Photographed by Romer Grey, Bob Carney, Thomas B. Middletown. Release date, March 31, 1932. Running time, 50 minutes.

Border Devils

(Artclass)

Western

Harry Carey, western star with a real ability with horse, gun and rope, is herein accused of murdering a friend. As he sets out to track down the culprit himself, a second pal, played by Neil Denham, is killed also. The plot is complicated but there is much for the younger element to enjoy in the way of western activity. Many of the youngsters' elders who like their westerns action-filled should find this entertaining, comment indicated.

The purpose of the second killing, it is revealed, is to substitute a member of an outlaw's gang for the dead man in order that he may gain admission to a ranch and complete the criminal acquisition of two border ranches, one of which is owned by Kathleen Collins. Denham had aided Carey's escape from jail. Carey comes across Denham's body and himself assumes his pal's name and identity, with the intention of tracking down the gang.

Aided by George F. Hayes, Carey is successful, after several additional complications, in breaking the gang and ending the long feud between the ranchers. Miss Collins and Carey complete the film in the expected fashion.

Produced by Weiss Brothers. Distributed by Artclass. Directed by William Nigh. From the novel by Murray Leinster. Dialogue and continuity by Harry Christ. Cameraman, William Dietz. Sound, B. J. Kroger. Release date, April 4, 1932. Running time, 65 minutes.

East of Shanghai

(B. I. P. America)

Drama

A film drama with a fair amount of pleasing scenic effects, but which was generally thought by a projection room audience rather too much concerned with dialogue to the detriment of the activity and pace of the story as a whole.

Henry Kendall, young bookkeeper, dissatisfied with his lot in life, inherits money and begins a round-the-world cruise with his wife, Joan Barry. On shipboard bound for the Far East, Kendall, attacked by illness, remains in his cabin, while his wife carries on a flirtation with an officer, played by Percy Marmont, who falls deeply in love with her. Kendall becomes involved with a girl, posing as a princess. The wife, sensing the affair, begins to react to Marmont's affection.

Miss Barry, however, seeing that her husband's weakness needs her watchful eye, refuses Marmont's offer to leave the ship at Singapore with him. Betty Amann had meanwhile departed with practically all of Kendall's money. The two board a slow boat for home, but are wrecked enroute, in a river in China. They are trapped in their cabin when the ship is abandoned by the crew. A most convenient gangway is suddenly discovered outside the porthole, however, and they reach the deck to be rescued by the crew of a Chinese junk. They return home, reconciled.

Produced by British International. Distributed by B. I. P. America. Directed by Alfred Hitchcock. Scenario by Alma Reville and Val Valentine. Editors, Rene Marrison, Winifred Cooper. Photographers, Charles Martin, John Cox. Sound, Alec Murray. Running time, 72 minutes.

In a Monastery Garden

Associated Producers and Distributors

Melodrama

(Seen in London)

Though the ingredients are not new, there is a sincerity about this picture which may appeal to the sentimental picturegoer.

Two brothers, Michael (John Stuart) and Paul (Hugh Williams), fall in love with the same girl while visiting Italy. She deceives Michael by returning his love openly while meeting his brother clandestinely. The girl has an Italian lover who is found murdered. Michael is suspected and is sentenced to life imprisonment. His brother returns to England where he poses as a great musical composer—using compositions of Michael as his own. Michael is pardoned, and learning that the girl is to marry his brother Paul, he enters a monastery. Paul later journeys to Italy to confess and get on the level with his brother, but Michael, realizing that the girl is genuinely in love with Paul, decides to remain in his monastic profession and stick to music.

There is some excellent acting, notably by Hugh Williams, and the monastery is wonderfully well reproduced. Maurice Elvey hits the popular level, though Broadway may not indorse this choice of story.

The Midnight Patrol

Newspaper Drama

C. C. Burr has made "The Midnight Patrol," starring Regis Toomey, whom he borrowed from Paramount, as a newspaper drama with plenty of action. Reactions and applause at a recent Fairfax theatre showing gave the film a reception which clearly indicated the extent to which they were entertained.

Toomey, as the star reporter who solves a murder mystery, scoops all the papers in town and wins the girl of his dreams, plays a role enthusiastically received. Fast moving scenes, natural portrayal of the players, and the smooth current of the drama, were credited to the directing of the veteran Christy Cabanne.

The cast includes mostly veterans of the screen, whose appearance should be welcome to the fans. In her first appearance on the screen in a long period, the comely Betty Bronson plays an effective role as the love element.

Mary Nolan gives an excellent portrayal as the tool of the scheming lawyer, Earle Foxe, it was agreed. Robert Elliott's performance as the smart detective was called outstanding. The other characters provided a pleasing realism.

Produced by C. C. Burr. Distributed by Monogram. Directed by Christy Cabanne. Screen play by George Jeske. Dialogue by Charles E. Roberts. Sound, Homer Ellmaker. Photography, Louis Physioc. Film editor, Tom Persons. Release date, April 10, 1932.

Ghost City

(Monogram)

Western

Melodramatic in the sense that most western features are melodramatic, this, starring Bill Cody and Andy Shuford, has its full quota of hard riding, fast shooting and general virulent action which seems to so engage the attention of the juvenile motion picture attendant, as well as a certain number of the older generation of patrons. An audience at Loew's New York recently appeared well entertained by the film.

Walter Miller is more or less doing as he pleases in the western town of Boontown. Handling much of the money of the miners and other of the populace, Miller is set to make a quick getaway with the funds, when Cody arrives to set up a newspaper for the avowed purpose of telling the people precisely what type of crook Miller is.

A few complications and Cody takes Andy under his wing, Andy being Miller's mistreated son, after Miller kills his wife, played by Kate Campbell. Cody has opened his print shop in a restaurant owned by Helen Foster, with whom he rapidly falls in love. Before much can be done about Miller, a gold rush empties the town and causes a disagreement among the crooks.

Cody and Miller race to the scene of mining operations, the former to protect Miss Foster's claims, the latter to get away with the document in question. They are trapped in a blind alley mine entrance, where Miller sets off a charge of powder, in an effort to dispose of Cody. Andy arrives in time to rescue Cody with the aid of a horse and a lariat, and Miller is finished. The film closes in expected fashion.

The Fighting Fool

(Columbia)

Western

The action is fast and furious and the rapid pace maintained throughout, in this Tim McCoy starring effort, which, though patterned more or less after the usual western type of yarn, should afford a goodly portion of amusement for the youngsters and numerous of the western film fans among the older generation.

McCoy is supported by a rather large cast, with Marceline Day in the role of heroine and other half of the romantic interest. All were considered to have turned in good performances in their respective parts.

McCoy, sheriff, is on the trail of a bandit gang, led by a mysterious "shadow," Robert Ellis. The sheriff starts his campaign through Dorothy Granger, friend of Ellis, and who has caused the death of his brother, Arthur Rankin. Miss Day, McCoy's sweetheart, becomes angry at the attention he is paying Miss Granger. McCoy captures and jails Ellis, who double crosses Miss Granger after she had aided his escape. The girl reveals the true state of affairs to Miss Day, who warns McCoy.

He immediately gathers a posse, and when the gang attempts to get away with the loot of a bank holdup, the sheriff is waiting with his men. One of those really active, gun-popping pitched battles results in the capture or death of the entire bandit gang. McCoy undertakes the duty of keeping Miss Day in permanent custody.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Lambert Hillyer. Story, adaptation, dialogue by Frank Howard Clark. Editor, Otto Meyer. Cameraman, Benjamin Kline. Sound, Glenn Rominger. Release date, January 20, 1932. Running time, 58 minutes.

SHORTS

Screen Souvenirs
(Paramount)

Highly Amusing

Decidedly amusing, interesting, well selected is this group of so-called "movie memories," extracted from the library of almost forgotten films of another, much earlier day. Seen are news shots of the launching of a ferryboat, and various sequences from the drama and the comedy of the days of the earliest development of the motion picture, as such, all highly amusing today. The accompanying comment is funny. An audience at the New York Paramount enjoyed this immensely.—10 minutes.

Take Your Pick
(RKO Pathe)

Good

Appealing and containing several splendid bits of scenery is this number of the Grantland Rice Sportlight series. Sequences move alternately from the sports of the snow and ice, centering about Lake Placid and offering beautiful scenic effects of the Adirondack Mountain winter, and the beaches of the Southland, where the tennis racket, the golf club and particularly the bathing suit have their innings. A good short.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Mystery of Marriage
(B. I. P. America)

Holds Interest

Animals, birds, insects are pictured following the instincts of mating and home-making, with these activities of the lower orders contrasted with similar action on the part of humans. It is of real interest and should hold a wide appeal. Particularly fascinating is the picturization in detail of the pollenization of plants.—Running time, 18 minutes.

The Flirty Sleepwalker

It's Been Done

Arthur Stone and Wade Boteler are the two husbands who play golf on Sundays while their wives attend church. Nothing, apparently, can be done about it. Stone gives Boteler's wife flowers on her birthday, and then walks into her bed while in a sleeping perambulation. Boteler finds him there and pursues him on to a fire escape which is shocked by contact with electric wires. Their sins confront them and the miracle happens. They attend church. It is hardly new, at best. Dorothy Granger and Patsy O'Leary are the wives.—Running time, 19 minutes.

The Chimp
(MGM)

Innumerable Laughs

Laurel and Hardy again, and again in a comedy that is a succession of enormously funny sequences in an amusingly silly story. The two are connected with a circus, and when it collapses, one gets a flea circus, the other a giant gorilla. They smuggle their property into a boarding house, where most of the action takes place. The obvious opportunities for comedy in that situation are not lost. Any audience, anywhere will laugh and laugh again. James Parrott directed.—Running time, 16 minutes.

Love Krazy
(Columbia)

Novel, Amusing

Krazy Kat as a film hero provides some really amusing moments. A rhino falls for him and reduces to astounding slimness to attract Kat. When Kat, invited to her house, refuses to reciprocate, she handles him rather roughly. Novel cartoon ideas help a lot in making this an amusing short.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Maybe I'm Wrong
(Vitaphone)

Amusing

A new York Strand audience extracted a good bit of enjoyment from this comedy. Though it is nonsense, it is amusing nonsense. Richy Craig, Jr., as a reporter, is assigned to "cover" a colony of lunatics and near lunatics. The resulting opportunities are rather well taken. His experiences among the odd are funny.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Self Condemned
(Radio)

Good

A detective story, rather well told. Walter Miller plays a reporter on assignment for a Sunday feature who visits the detective who handled the case. The officer recounts the story as it happened. A tricky lawyer is murdered and suspicion is cast upon practically all of the characters. The murderer is finally discovered for a sharp climax.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Land of the Shamrocks
(B. I. P. America)

Interesting

A short subject in the nature of a sightseeing trip through Ireland, with a background accompaniment of a male chorus of 18 rendering in rather effective style numerous of the old Irish ballads. Panoramic views of some of the beautiful scenery of the island country, with closeup shots of waterfalls, streams, mountains and the abounding lakes make up the number. Interesting, scenically fine.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Spanky
(MGM)

Great Comedy

One of the delightful Our Gang series, with Spanky, youngest and perhaps the most appealing of the children, in the leading spot as both hero and villain. The effort is tremendously funny, with laughs spotted continuously from the word go. The kids put on "Uncle Tom's Cabin," with the youngster as Tom and Topsy both. It is perhaps the most amusing spot in the short, especially when Eva goes to heaven on ropes suspended from the top of the barn. Eva falls when the ropes tangle and Tom makes the aerial voyage instead. Any audience will enjoy it immensely. The appeal is unlimited. Robert McGowan directed for Hal Roach.—Running time, 21 minutes.

First in War

Great Fun

Charley Chase, a Marine sergeant stationed somewhere in Central America, is the leading player in what develops into a roaring funny comedy effort. Chase, A.W.O.L., writes a lively college song and tries to sell it. Just as it is being rejected in the song publisher's office a rebel leader rushes in demanding a fast war song. Charley's effort is made to fill the bill. When he returns to his command, he is put through a series of stunts which will make any audience laugh as they rarely do. Warren Doane directed for Hal Roach.—Running time, 20 minutes.

It's A Cinch

Only Fair

Monte Collins as the hopeful dance instructor who takes up boxing by accident or mistake, and cleans up through the brain work of his best girl, Phyllis Crane, does his best here, but that is hardly more than fair. He becomes involved with a fighter, who frames him into thinking he will give Collins the fight. The girl saves the day by feeding the fighter heavily and forcing him into a collapse in the ring. A little slapstick is only that.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Crosby, Columbo and Vallee
(Vitaphone)

Amusing

Amusing, especially for the younger element, is this animated number of the Merry Melodies series. The little animated Indian goes to his "girl" in an elastic canoe, and they set up the radio. The popular song which comes forth is the reason for the ensuing contortions by numerous species of animated animal. Bits of the fire acquire legs and dance about setting fire to trees and shrubs in an entertaining fashion. —Running time, 7 minutes.

Radio Girl

Good Cartoon

An amusing and lively cartoon of the Terry-Toons variety, with a novel thought or two which helps. The animated creatures take their morning exercises over the air, while our hero falls in love with the voice over the air. He hears a cry of fire from the broadcasting station, and rescues his "girl" by shooting through the aerial amusingly.—Running time, 6 minutes.

He's A Honey

Not Quite

This almost becomes a really amusing comedy effort, but it is to be feared the Harry Barris, who plays the lead as the much sought after band leader, is a far better musician than comedian. Edgar Kennedy as the father of Helen Mann, who means to marry Barris, makes the real comedy moments comic, with his expression of anger and approaching hysterics when annoyed. It all comes out right and the youngsters are married after Barris is given opportunity to render several song numbers effectively, if the crooning type of rendition is found attractive.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Ziegfeld Starring Eddie Dowling in Broadcast Series

Eddie Dowling's showmanship impressively launched the Ziegfeld-Dowling-Chrysler radio broadcasting series on Sunday night over a nationwide hook-up of the Columbia System. Deviating from the usual straight-away broadcasting performances as practiced by national merchandisers, Dowling, in the role of master-of-ceremonies, conducted the program along the lines of a typical Ziegfeld musical show, eliminating all of the stock remarks and announcement chatter of the average m. c. The remaining broadcasts will be delivered accordingly.

Performing each Sunday evening and working from the Columbia studio atop the Steinway building in New York, the Chrysler interests are booked to sponsor 12 additional broadcasts.

Ziegfeld will support Dowling, who will be the star attraction on each of the broadcasts, with featured players and with talent from his organization, many of whom are now appearing in his current "Hot Cha" musical.

May 4 Set for Paramount Meet

Paramount will hold its annual sales convention on May 4 instead of May 14, as originally announced. The location, Los Angeles, has not been changed.

Fox Pictures Said To be Involved in Kansas "Blue" Tilt

Whether the injunction obtained by Fox West Coast Theatres against Kansas officials in the fight for Sunday shows also applies to Fox pictures is a legal point to be decided in the federal courts.

Glen W. Dickinson, president of the Kansas circuit bearing his name, claims that the restraining order also applies to films distributed by Fox. On this ground, and armed with an injunction obtained on his own account in the federal district court, he ordered Sunday performances in all Dickinson theatres in Kansas on April 3. Some 20 houses are involved in 14 towns.

The innovation resulted in the arrest of seven employees in two situations. They have been charged with violation of the state's labor laws.

Ross Checking Service Moves to New York May 1

Ross Federal Service, Inc., national box office checking organization, will move its headquarters from Chicago to New York, May 1, Harry A. Ross, president, announces. The corporation now has 27 branches throughout the United States, with a field personnel of 3,000 bonded employees. The company has headquartered in Chicago since its organization two years ago.

Fox's Net Income $1,127,414 for Year Ended December 26

Net income from operations of Fox Film Corporation for the year ended Dec. 26, 1931, totaled $1,127,414.87 after interest, but before providing for depreciation and other non-cash items, the annual report shows. After writing off depreciation in the amount of $4,079,658.05 and amortization of bond discount and expenses totaling $1,248,421.54, there was shown a net loss, after taxes, of $4,263,557.56 as compared to a profit of $10,251,826.90 for the previous fiscal year.

Gross income of the corporation amounted to $85,774,237 in 1931 as compared to $102,004,009 in 1930. This decline of $16,229,772 in income is principally accounted for by a decrease of approximately $3,800,000 in film rentals, $10,000,000 in theatre admissions and $1,800,000 in dividends received.

The operating expenses of the corporation, exclusive of studio expense, declined from $54,563,268 in 1930 to $50,363,056 in 1931. This is accounted for chiefly by a reduction in the cost of theatre operation, the reduction in studio expense being reflected in the production cost of pictures which is amortized separately. At the beginning of the year, picture inventory including the cost of completed negatives, positive prints and stories and production in process, etc., amounted to $21,627,175.99. The cost of picture production in 1931 was $19,861,147.32 as compared to $26,203,623.01 in 1930. The amortization taken against picture costs during the year totaled $24,352,023.04. This left an inventory of $17,136,300.27 at the end of 1931.

Vitaphone Plant Closing for Improvements Only, Says Sax

Sam Sax, production chief at the Warner Vitaphone studio in Brooklyn, describes the four weeks' shutdown of the plant, set for April 23, as solely for the purpose of making extensive alterations and improvements in the studio's physical properties.

New equipment will be installed and the stages made larger, according to Sax. The entire personnel of the studio will be retained during the closing period, with the exception of stage crews and cameramen.

Arrivals and Departures

Arthur Loew arrived in New York from a trip to Europe, on Wednesday, when Frank Borzage, Sonia Levien and S. N. Behram departed for London to study a new stage play. Jack L. Warner returned on Wednesday from a month's stay abroad.

Joe Pollack, former president of National Screen, expects to sail for Berlin on Friday. Sergei Eisenstein, director, is in New York and will remain for two weeks.

Stars Again at Park Central

Mary Brian, Ken Murray, Marjorie White, James Hall, Anna May Wong, Jack Haley, Esther Ralston, Benn Rubin, Dixie Lee, Dita Parlo, Tom Moore, Jacqueline Logan and Frank Buck, explorer, were scheduled to entertain Wednesday night at the Park Central Grill, New York.

TEXT OF BLOCK BOOKING RULING

The complete text of the block booking decision handed down by U. S. District Court Judge Manton, and associates Chase and Augustus Hand, follows:

The Federal Trade Commission issued an order against the respondents directing them to cease and desist from certain practices found by it to constitute methods of unfair competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (38 Stat. 717, 15 U. S. C. A. 45). That part of the order sought to be enforced directs the respondents to cease and desist "from leasing or offering to lease for exhibition in a theatre or theatres motion picture films in a block or group of two or more films at a designated lump sum price for the entire block or group only and requiring the exhibitor to lease all such films or be permitted to lease none; and from leasing or offering to lease for exhibition such motion picture films in a block or group of two or more at a designated lump sum price for the entire block or group and at separate and several prices for separate and several films, or for a number or numbers thereof less than the total number, which total or lump sum price and separate and several prices shall bear to each other such relation as to operate as an unreasonable restraint upon the freedom of an exhibitor to select and lease for use and exhibition only such film or films of such block or group as he may desire and prefer to procure for exhibition; or shall bear such relation to each other as to tend to require an exhibitor to lease such entire block or group or forego the lease of any portion or portions thereof; or shall bear such relations to each other that the effect of such proposed contract for the lease of such films may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any part of the certain line of commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, involved in the said proposed sale, to wit: the business of the production, distribution and exhibition of motion picture films to the public, or the business of production and distribution, or of production or distribution of moving picture films for public exhibition." No review or all or any part of the order entered has been sought by the respondents. However, upon an application to enforce the order, it is not essential to establish a violation of the commission's order, for the first question we must examine in the proceeding is whether or not there has been a violation of the law. Fed. Trade Com. v. Balme, 23 Fed. (2d) 615 (C. C. A. 2); certiorari denied, 277 U. S. 598. The statute grants jurisdiction to the court to enter, upon the pleadings, testimony and proceedings, a decree affirming, modifying or setting aside an order entered by the commission, and in so doing, the court has the power to examine the whole record and ascertain for itself the issues presented and whether there are material facts not reported by the commission. Fed. Trade Com. v. Curtis Pub. Co., 260 U. S. 568. Section 5, which is alleged to have been violated, has reference to unfair methods of competition in commerce, which are delared to be unlawful, and, in determining whether given acts amount to unfair methods of competition within the meaning of the act, the standard is the one "established by the Sherman Act in the words 'restraint of trade or commerce' and 'monopolize or attempt to monopolize,' and by the courts in construing the Sherman Act with reference to acts 'which operate to the prejudice of the public interest by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the due course of trade,' and 'restrict the common liberty to engage therein.'" Fed. Trade Com. v. Beech-Nut Co., 257 U. S. 441; Standard Oil Co. of N. J. v. Fed. Trade Com., 282 Fed. 81 (C. C. A. 3). A practice which is against public policy because of its dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create a monopoly, is declared to be unfair and unlawful by Section 5. Fed. Trade Com. v. Gratz, 253 U. S. 421. And public policy is the policy of the common law, equity or statutory, with statutes paramount. Chicago, B. & A. R.R. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549.

Block Booking Defined

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is a New York Corporation engaged in the business, interstate and foreign, of producing, leasing, transporting and distributing to exhibitors and exhibiting for profit, motion picture films. These films are produced at their studios located in several states of the United States and are distributed and transported therefrom in interstate commerce to theatres located in several other states. It is in competition with other producers. The individual respondents are officers of the corporation, and as such, operate and control its business activities. The commission found that it adopted a method of leasing its films under a system known as "block booking." Under such plan, films were offered in blocks only. A block is a group of films offered as a unit, containing a number of individual motion pitures which are available for lease by exhibitors for three months or for one year. Such blocks contain 13 or 26 films, or 52 or 104 films, according to whether the theatre changes films once or twice a week. The individual films in blocks being offered are not always identical. The blocks offered to an exhibitor contain certain films which the exhibitor may not want to lease, but he must lease all or none. He may not select some of the individual films and reject others contained in the block unless he exercises the option to pay prices found by the commission to be arbitrarily fixed from 50 to 75 per cent higher than the estimated prices of such films as part of the block. If the exhibitor declines to take all, the block is successively offered to his competitors until a lease is made. Only if all competitors refuse the block are the individual films offered to exhibitors upon some other basis arrived at by negotiation between the producer and exhibitors. The commission determined this method of distribution to be unfair, and that the purpose and effect of the alternative offer is to coerce and intimidate an exhibitor into surrendering his free choice in the leasing of films, and into leasing films in blocks as offered, thereby denying to such exhibitor the opportunity and profit of leasing and exhibiting certain other films of higher qualities and which such exhibitor's patrons demand and which such exhibitor desires to exhibit. It is thus concluded by the commission that this distribution policy lessens competition and tends to create a monopoly in the motion picture industry by tending to exclude from the market and industry independent producers and distributors of films, and denies to the exhibitors freedom of choice in leasing films.

Free Competition

There are seven other producers of major rank and some smaller, who are in competition with the respondents. The evidence discloses the total number of feature pictures released annually, and the percentage thereof produced by the respondent in the years 1919 to 1923, is shown in the table (a) below. Since 1919 there has been a reduction in the percentage of feature films released by the respondent, and table (b) below sets forth the percentage which film rentals received by the respondent from feature pictures were of the total rentals paid to all producers and distributors for feature pictures for the same period.

From this, it is apparent that the general production of feature pictures has likewise declined since 1919, and these tables demonstrate that there is free competition among producers and distributors for the distribution and marketing of their pictures. There is a lack of monopolization by the respondent and, in fact, lack of ability to achieve a monopoly and therefore not a business operation which would unduly hinder competitors, as indicated by the foot-note (c) showing first, the total number of feature pictures released during the years 1919 and 1923, respectively; second, the number and percentage of total released by the respondent; third, the number and percentage of total released by each of the respondent's principal competitors, and fourth, the number and percentage released by smaller distributors. These tables indicate a state of free competition in the industry and sufficiently negative the finding of the commission that the respondent dominates the industry. The percentages disclosed by the evidence sufficiently demonstrate that the respondents have not absorbed the exhibition time of the first-run theatres, to the exclusion of other producers, large or small. Nor has the method of negotiation for the leasing of its films shown effective or destructive injury to first-run houses. About one-half of the houses of the key cities are disclosed not to have shown the respondent's pictures, and of those showing its pictures, but a small percentage have shown them in substantial numbers. In the last two years, approximately three-fourths of those showing respondent's pictures show less than 25 per cent thereof. There is no finding by the commission that the method of negotiation in block booking, which it condemns, was generally successful in the distribution of their pictures to the detriment of respondent's competitors, nor is there a finding in respect to the existence or absence of free and active competition in the industry generally. The record discloses that the respondent's releases in 1923 were but 12 per cent of the total releases, and this shows a decline in percentage since 1919. The small producer or distributor, as distinguished from the larger companies, has not been shown to have been affected by any combination between the large companies. The respondent's sales methods have not been shown to have any effect upon its competitors—the smaller producers—when the whole field is surveyed, and it is impossible to say on the evidence that the effect of block booking as practiced by the respondent, or its accumulative effect as practiced independently by the respondent and others, has unfairly affected competition. On the other hand, it may fairly be said that all persons engaged in the production of pictures have been able successfully to distribute their product. This has permitted fair competition in the industry.

Incidents of Bargaining

It is admitted that the purpose of the respondent's method of negotiation and block booking is to sell the entire product to a single exhibitor in a single locality, but the method is said to deny to exhibitors freedom of choice in leasing films. Where an offer, unaccompanied by any declaration that the exhibitor must take all or none, is accepted, there is no restraint upon the exhibitor's freedom of choice. If the offer is rejected and the respondent refuses to consider the lease of less than the block until the block has been successively offered to the exhibitor's competitors, there is no restraint placed upon the freedom of choice of the exhibitor if all refuse the block. But if, under these circumstances, the exhibitor is induced to take all, by refusal of respondent at that time to consider the lease of less, the result is not due to denial or freedom of choice, but to the exercise of his choice of two alternatives, namely, to refuse at that time to take the block and await developments as to other competitors, or to take the block and thereby forestall any of his competitors from obtaining it. After this, there is the insistance on an increase in price by the respondent if individual films are accepted. But these we regard as merely ordinary incidents of bargaining and negotiating between seller and buyer, out of which a contract may or may not result. In either case, the buyer exercises his legal right to purchase or not, as he chooses. A distributor of films by lease or sale has the right to select his own customers and to sell such quantities at given prices, or to refuse to sell at all to any particular person for reasons of his own. Fed. Trade Com. v. Raymond Co., 263 U. S. 565; United States v. Colgate, 250 U. S. 300; Natl. Biscuit Co. v. Fed. Trade Com., 299 Fed. 733 (C. C. A. 2); Great A. & P. Tea Co. v. Cream of Wheat Co., 227 Fed. 46 (C. C. A. 2). But in the sale or lease, it is unlawful if the sale is attempted to be brought about by an agreement, either actual or implied, as to the maintenance of resale prices. United States v. A. Schrader's Sons, Inc., 252 U. S. 85; Harriet Hubbard Ayer, Inc., v. Fed. Trade Com., 15 Fed. (2d) 274 (C. C. A. 2). No such effort was made here.

Denies Conspiracy

The commission did not find that the method of negotiation for the leasing of the films in question was carried on by the respondent as the result of a conspiracy or agreement with other producers, and, in the absence of such finding, they had an undoubted right to sell in blocks or to adhere to a policy of terms of sale, price of sale, and persons to whom they sold. Of course, there are some exceptions to sales policy which we think are not applicable here. The commission may not interfere with the respondent's attempt to effectively dispose of their products as a whole before entering upon negotiations for the disposition of less than all. Nor is this method of negotiation and sales creative of a dangerous tendency to unduly hinder competition or to create a monopoly. Beech-Nut Co. v. Fed. Trade Com., 257 U. S. 441; Fed. Trade Com. v. Gratz, 253 U. S. 421. We see nothing in the method of competition which is disclosed by the efforts of salesmanship involved in the respondent's business which has or can have any dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or to create a monopoly. The method of distribution by sale or lease, or the practice of selling through a common distributor is open to every other produer, large or small, to the extent of his pictures produced. To the extent that the method of negotiation carried on by the respondent is successful, the greater number of pictures produced by it and the greater number which may be placed at wholesale in a single contract, may result from the size of its business and the industry it employs. But the size alone does not give rise to a violation of the law. United States v. Internatl. Harvester Co., 273 U. S. 693; United States v. U. S. Steel Corp., 240 U. S. 442. The mere fact that a given method of competition makes it difficult for competitors to do business successfully is not of itself sufficient to brand the method of competition as unlawful and unfair. Fed. Trade Com. v. Curtis Pub. Co., 260 U. S. 568; Fed. Trade Com. v. Sinclair Refining Co., 261 U. S. 463. From the tables referred to above, it is apparent that the respondent did not have a monopoly in the film industry.

It is true that the commission in its findings (Par. 11) determined that the "acts practices and things done as hereinbefore set forth, have unduly hindered and are now unduly hindering, the competition in interstate commerce of competing producers and distributors of motion picture films; and . . . have a dangerous tendency to create . . . a monopoly in the motion picture industry." This finding relates to and includes block booking, for it says (Par. 10), "the purpose and necessary effect of such distribution policy is to lessen competition and to tend to create a monopoly in the motion picture industry, tending to exclude from the market and the industry small independent producers and distributors of films and denying to exhibitors freedom of choice in leasing of films." An examination of the record reveals, however, that this is a conclusion of the author of this finding, which is not sustained by the evidence. Without support by evidence in the record, it will not sustain the order to cease and desist. Natl. Biscuit Co. v. Fed. Trade Com., supra; Mennen Co. v. Fed. Trade Com., 288 Fed. 774 (C. C. A. 2). The commission is required to make findings of fact, but whether a given method of competition is fair or unfair within the meaning of the act, is a question of law for the courts. Fed. Trade Com. v. Gratz, supra; Fed. Trade Com. v. Beech-Nut Co., supra. The respondent is not required, under the law, to so conduct its business that every competitor may conduct his with an equal degree of success according to his size and importance. It was not the purpose of the act to equalize opportunity or insure an equal degree of success upon the part of all competitors in a given industry, but it was its purpose to preserve for the benefit of the public, active competition therein, and where there is no question of monopoly involved, the question is whether the method of competition described has a dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition. Fed. Trade Com. v. Gratz, supra. As the Supreme Court put it in Fed. Trade Com. v. Curtis Pub. Co. (supra),

Cite Curtis Case

> "Effective competition requires that traders have large freedom of action when conducting their own affairs. Success alone does not show reprehensible methods, although it may increase or make insuperable the difficulties which rivals must face."

In the instant case, there is no finding that the respondent combined with other large producers for the purpose of hindering those outside the large combination, and the evidence would not warrant such a finding. In the absence of combination or agreement, the fact that the method of negotiation as practiced by the respondent tends to exclude other independent producers, is of itself insufficient to establish any probable tendency toward the creation of the evils prohibited by the Sherman Act. Where a practice is not inherently unlawful and unfair, and its legality depends upon its effect, a finding that it has dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create a monopoly, must be based upon its effect as demonstrated upon the experience of competitors. Standard Oil Co. v. Fed. Trade Com., 261 U. S. 463.

The cases of Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30, and United States v. First Natl. Pictures, 282 U. S. 44, in no way support the decision of the commission. The freedom of contract therein protected was the right to contract independently of a restraint placed upon either party by an agreement with others, and the vice of the agreement condemned was that by unlawful agreement or conspiracy the distributors had agreed among themselves not to contract with exhibitors, except in accordance with a form of agreement to which all distributors agreed to adhere. That question is not involved in this case. The basis of the order here sought to be enforced is that by refusing to consider an offer for less than a block of pictures, until the possibility of selling the same block to others had been exhausted, the respondent exerts pressure upon the exhibitor for the purpose of compelling or inducing him to take the block, and that is said to be unfair and unlawful, for it is claimed to deny to the exhibitor freedom of choice in the purchase of his pictures. But that freedom is denied only if the distributor is able to find some other exhibitor who will take the block. If, on the other hand, he cannot, the first bidder for the picture may buy at the increased price.

Moreover, the evidence in the record discloses that the effect of this method of negotiation has not been to unduly restrain the exhibitor's freedom of choice. It is only a small percentage of contracts made which are for blocks offered. The greater number are shown to be for a few pictures only. The record shows that the respondent succeeded in making a total of 9,128 contracts with exhibitors for pictures in groups and of these 57½ per cent were for ten pictures or less. This, it would seem, demonstrates that the method of negotiation prohibited by the cease and desist order has not had the effect of unduly restraining the exhibitor's freedom of selecting from among the pictures offered those which he desires.

Nor is the alternative offer permitted to be made for the films, that is, to lease less than a block at higher prices, a coercive or intimidating method. The commission found that the alternative prices are "so high as to make it impossible for him (the exhibitor) successfully to compete with rival theaters." The exhibitor can freely accept or refuse this offer. If the distributor has the right to sell or attempt to sell his films and the right to make terms which are reasonable, this offer of sale under such terms in no way restrains competition in trade; it constitutes merely a part of the ordinary process of bargaining with the customer for the sale of one's product. Each sale, because of the difference in films, presents an individual problem which must be considered by the buyer and seller according to the circumstances and in conformity with their best judgments. At no time did the respondent refuse to sell if its terms were met. It engaged in a lawful effort to market its products at what it deemed to be desirable terms.

Nor may the order be supported upon the theory that the contracts made for the leasing of the films are unlawful as tying or exclusive contracts and opposed to public policy. A tying contract is one in which one or more different articles are tied together for sale. Such contracts are not unlawful as opposed to public policy per se but only when insisted upon in a sale by a corporation which has a monopoly. Fed. Trade Com. v. Gratz, supra. Section 3 of the Clayton Act makes it unlawful to lease or make a contract for the sale of goods "on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise . . . of a competitor . . . of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract . . . may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

No Monopoly Created

No such contract is made here. When pictures are leased in blocks, they are not tied together, and the respondent's pictures are not indispensable to any exhibitor. And as said in Fed. Trade Com. v. Gratz (supra):

> "All questions of monopoly or combination being out of the way, a private merchant, acting with entire good faith, may properly refuse to sell except in conjunction, such closely associated articles as ties, and bagging. If real competition is to continue, the right of the individual to exercise reasonable discretion in respect of his own business methods must be preserved. U. S. v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300; U. S. v. A. Schrader's Son, Inc., 252 U. S. 85."

It is true that respondent's pictures are copyrighted and that one cannot use them except under lease or license, but by reason thereof, no monopoly in the pictures has been created, and moreover, the respondent's pictures are not indispensable to any exhibitor, as found by the commission. Exhibitors need pictures, to be sure, but not necessarily respondent's. Its competitors have pictures which are also covered by copyrights and subject to lease; any person can make a picture and copyright it and any exhibitor is free to lease a copyrighted picture or refuse to do so.

The respondent has lawfully exercised its right to sell its product to the best advantage and in such quantities and to such persons as it chooses. It neither has a monopoly and, apparently, not the ability to acquire one. The percentage of the pictures produced in the film rentals received have progressively declined during the period covered. The means and methods employed in marketing its leases of films to prospective customers are matters within the business judgment of a private producer of films and carries with it the legal right to bargain and negotiate as the respondent did. The method of negotiation which has been condemned by the commission, does not disclose a dangerous tendency unlawfully to hinder competition, nor does it create a monopoly. The findings are insufficient in law to support the conclusions of fact reached and therefore the petition to enforce Paragraph 2 of the order to cease and desist must be denied.

Multicolor Trustee Named; Hughes Effects Economy

Creditors in Los Angeles this week appointed Walter C. Durst, trustee of the Multicolor laboratory. Under his guidance, the plant will remain open for operation in black-and-white and color work. In the meantime, the Howard Hughes producing headquarters have been moved from United Artists studio to the Multicolor building, as a measure of economy.

New Distributing Company Formed

Eldorado Productions will commence operations immediately for the distribution of Independent product. It is headed by Henry E. Braloff, and has offices at 330 West 42d street, New York.

Braloff is a newcomer in the picture field, coming from "downtown" business circles, where he has been connected with construction and engineering work. Associated with Braloff, as general manager, is Sidney E. Abel, for over 10 years a sales executive of Fox, and for two years general sales manager of RCA Photophone. It is stated that Eldorado's plans include the handling of product in both domestic and foreign fields.

Three Units May Join the MPTOA

Prospects of three additional exhibitor organizations becoming associated with the MPTOA are favorable, M. A. Lightman, president, indicated while in New York this week.

The organizations are: the MPTO of Ohio, Allied MPTO of Boston, and MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware. A fourth organization, now forming among exhibitors of Vermont, Maine and New Hampshire, may also become affiliated, according to Lightman.

Roxy Stockholders To Meet

Class A stockholders of Roxy Theatre Corporation will hold a special meeting April 18 to elect a majority of the board of directors. Heretofore the Class A had a minority on the board, but with omission of the Class A dividend, due March 1, the Class A stock gets the right to a majority of the directorate.

FROM HOLLYWOOD

By LEO MEEHAN

While the newly organized IMPPA is being looked upon as an infant organization, it is making sufficient noise to be recognized as a grown-up institution. Its first victory in a fight for lower production costs was conceded by its members in the obtaining of a special franchise to use RCA recording equipment. Following this it was discovered they could not meet the requirements of an agreement recently entered into between the major producing companies and the Cameramen's union and they presented their problems to the union officials, who are now trying to work out a special agreement that will meet IMPPA's pocketbook.

With both of the aforementioned issues well under control, the association is presenting a third problem for modification in a concerted fight to make it possible for them to compete with the larger organizations. This is in the form of an appeal to the city council to revise the present existing licenses fee of $400 a year for each firm, person or organization engaged in making motion pictures, regardless of the extent of activities. Under such a law, it is compulsory for an individual making one picture to pay the same license fee as a major producing organization producing 60 pictures. The council has referred it to the finance committee, which after all indicates the independent producers are on the right track by fighting for their rights in a body.

Preparatory to starting an extensive production campaign, Paramount has added 19 writers to its present list of 33, making a total of 52 on the staff. The list of new writers and those already on the staff receiving new contracts consists of Ben W. Levy, James Bernard Fagan, Harvey Fergusson, Hugh Stange, Lester Cole, Daniel N. Rubin, Malcolm Stuart Boylan, Nathan Asch, Joseph Moncure March, William F. Kay, Arthur Caesar, Ward Wing, Edward Kaufman, Nick Barrows, Anthony Coldeway, Harry Wagstaff Gribble, Raoul Whitfield and S. K. Lauren. This staff ranks second to MGM with a total of 57 internationally famed and seasoned screen writers, including such names as Vina Delmar, Isaac Don Levine, Gene Markey, Donald Ogden Stewart, John Colton, Willard Mack, John Meehan, Lawrence Stallings, Bayard Veiller, John Van Druten, Edgar Allen Woolf, Frances Marion, John Emerson, Anita Loos, C. Gardner Sullivan, John Monk Saunders, Hans Kraly and Leonard Praskins.

Determined to see their actresses presented on the screen attired in the latest and most advanced style creations, Dave Selznick, head of Radio studios, has imported two more noted authorities on milady's dress. The team consists of Mme. Josette Delima, recently affiliated with the house of Davidow in New York, and Kate Drain Lawson, former technical advisor for the New York Theatre Guild. Both will work with Mrs. Brock Pemberton forming a style cabinet similar to the studio's writing cabinet.

Here and There. . . . Adhering strictly to Hollywood traditions, Lili Damita denied she was engaged to Sidney Smith, scenarist, as she stepped off the steamer in San Francisco after romancing a while on the beach of Waikiki. . . . Gwen Lee's mother has decided to drop the charges of incompetence filed against her daughter a month ago. . . . And Claire Windsor with fight in her eyes is determined to battle it out with Marian Y. Read, who has filed suit for $100,000 on grounds that the actress alienated the affections of her husband, Alfred C. Read, Jr. Speaking on behalf of the industry at large, Miss Windsor declared: "It's time to put a stop to this eternal harassment and abuse of persons in the public eye." . . .

Following on the heels of the Agua Caliente Handicap, guests of Palm Springs witnessed a horned toad race where more than 100 desert ponies, selected from the West's finest toad stables, participated. . . . That Aimee Huston debate on prohibition didn't succeed in getting the publicity anticipated in the follow-up. Local dailies, in commenting on the ballot count, gave the story only two paragraphs showing Aimee winning by a margin of 5,000. . . .

Radio has divorced itself from the present cycle of political pictures by postponing preparation on "Hell Bent for Election" indefinitely. This leaves the field entirely up to Columbia, Paramount, Warners and MGM, each planning to make one picture with a political theme. . . . Ralph Murphy, engaged to direct the Radio political yarn, has left the organization to join Charles R. Rogers in a directorial capacity. . . .

Perhaps for the first time in his life, Edwin Carewe shunned news cameramen as they greeted him in custody of federal officers under a charge of evading income tax to the tune of approximately $108,547. . . . George Merrick, veteran producer and recently associated with the Roxy theatre in New York, is returning to the production field in the capacity of supervisor for Al Mannon, head of Supreme Productions. . . .

In the face of a stubborn rejection of many glittering offers to return to the screen, Clara Bow's manager is now in New York negotiating a deal for her to appear over the radio. . . . Speaking of screen comebacks, Glenn Tryon, former Universal star, and Bobby Vernon, former Christie headliner, are making a bid for marquee billing by formation of a comedy team for a series of shorts with Al Christie. . . . First public display of the new Ford eights drew an attendance of 80,000 spectators on the opening night, which indicates a fine example of showmanship for some of our exhibitors to shoot at. . . . Announcement of the new car occupied full-page newspaper advertising a week in advance of its rising curtain.

Activity among the Hollywood screen players shows Constance Cummings to be the busiest leading woman in town. When she is not working in the new Harold Lloyd picture, one can find her alternating between two pictures on the Columbia lot. . . . Greta Garbo is using her odd moments preparing for a trip home to Sweden, with Harry Eddington saying he doesn't know anything about it.

Laemmle, Jr., Sees Need of New Stars

Producers must create or develop at least a score of new stars during 1932, according to Carl Laemmle, Jr., in charge of Universal production on the Coast. Laemmle points to the fact that the development of the talking picture technique has reduced the number of stars from 100 to about 25 or 30.

"The public demands stars and creates them by its interest," said Laemmle. "Producers must see to it that prospective stars are given every opportunity to display their versatility so that the public confidence is fully justified."

Laemmle said further: "Good stories and sympathetic production create stars. There is no such thing as a 'type' star today."

Amend St. Louis Tax Bill

The board of aldermen of St. Louis have approved amendments to the amusement admission tax bill reported favorably by the legislation committee. Under the amendment tickets under 30 cents will be tax exempt, with a graduated scale from that point up. The bill, if passed, would remain in effect until February 1.

Group Honors Johnston

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, was guest of honor at a luncheon at the Statler Hotel, Boston, given by Herman Rifkin, president of Hollywood Pictures Corporation, Boston. Fifty locally prominent industry men attended.

Protest Building Code Change

Members of the Cincinnati exhibitor league are vigorously protesting a provision in the city building code requiring them to provide a special room for rewinding film. Pending an investigation, the council has taken the protest under advisement.

Einfeld, Blumenstock Return

S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity for Warner, has returned with Mort Blumenstock, in charge of advertising and exploitation for theatres, from a week's trip during which conferences were held with theatre and branch managers.

Lilyan Tashman Ending Tour

Lilyan Tashman, Paramount player, left New York late last week for St. Louis, where she will appear for a week at the Ambassador. From there she will join her husband at Hollywood after a stop at Washington, ending her stage tour.

Publix Books Warner Film

Publix, which has booked "So Big," Warner film starring Barbara Stanwyck, has prepared a special advertising campaign which will be used over the entire circuit for the film. G. J. Meredith prepared the campaign.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

A tremendous gain of nearly a half-million dollars was recorded in the total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended April 2, 1932, when $2,461,281 was taken at the box office of 180 theatres in 30 key cities, an increase of $450,182 over the calendar week ended March 26, when the total figure reached $2,011,099 for 180 theatres in 30 cities. Three new high individual theatre totals were recorded during the later week, and five new low individual records, which compare with only one new "high" and 19 new "lows" during the previous week. The new "highs" were established at the Palace, Chicago; Loew's, Montreal, and the Palace in Montreal.

HEART!

—and this has it! American boyhood on the threshold of manhood. Plunging gaily ahead—always unafraid, sometimes unloved, seldom understood. A picture for adults that kids can enjoy.

Its humanness will open the nation's purse strings.

DEAR HERALD:

The farther we get away from Hollywood and the more we think about it the more peeved we get. When Will Rogers, Joe E. Brown, Clark Gable or Chic Sale and boys like those go away and come back, Hollywood gets out the brass band and throws a big feed for 'em, but when we went there the town was as indifferent about it as a biscuit shooter in the Brown Derby cafe. We stayed there over three months and we'll betcha there weren't over twenty thousand people knew we were in town, and there's no doggone sense in a town acting that way, that's why it doesn't improve faster than it does.

We've got one good friend out there we can tie to, and that's Miss Mildred Early, the lady who regulates things and puts pep into the HERALD office, and who handled our mail and cashed our checks and read our postal cards for us. She told us that she was sorry to see us leave, which would indicate that she was brought up by a mighty good family.

Texas Is a Big Subject

We presume that when Mr. Ramsaye got down in Georgia he thought he was a long ways from New York, but compared to Texas that would be only a before breakfast jaunt. When you leave El Paso in the morning you expect to be at Ft. Worth for lunch but you have to romp on the gas if you get there by the second night. They could lay Texas down on Massachusetts, Vermont, Rhode Island and Connecticut and enough would lap over to make New York and New Jersey and you wouldn't know what to do with the balance after that.

If you don't think Texas is a big state ask Speaker Garner, and if you don't think Texas is for Speaker Garner for president, ask Texas, she'll tell you, and if you want to know if we are for Speaker Garner for president ask us and we'll tell you that we are for Charles G. Dawes because we are fed up on "Investigating Committees," and the brand of "economy" that Congress and the Administration have been giving us, but then that's politics, and we're no politician.

"Regular" Showmen

Pecos, Texas, is a town the state can be proud of. This is largely due to H. H. Johnson, who manages the Grand Theatre. Johnson is a live one. When he played "Cimmaron," he went out to the edge of town (and the edge of town isn't very far out) and staked off five hundred lots and got five hundred children to make the "run" just as they did when they opened the Cherokee strip pictured in "Cimmaron." Did Johnson do business with the picture? Ask Johnson. When he played "Frankenstein," he got three or four circus wagons that had been left in town and got permission from the mayor to park them in the street and he plastered them all over with "Frankenstein" paper, and that night paw and maw and all the kids in west Texas saw "Frankenstein." That's the kind of a showman Johnson is.

Jack Laird, who operates the Lyric theatre at Odessa, is another live one. Jack said he would like to join the "Round Table Club" if he was sure Chick Lewis would permit him. We asked him if he snored in his sleep and he said he didn't. We told him Chick was very particular and didn't allow anyone to join who snored, but if he would make out an application and send it to Chick with a promise to write something for the Round Table Club we were sure he would send him a membership card and button. We are expecting Jack to do it.

Neligh, Neb.

From Tucson, Arizona, to Neligh, Nebraska, is just 1,720 miles, and to drive that distance with your left hand is quite a task if you ask us.

Our right shoulder went on the bum after leaving Tucson and it was about as useful as horns on a jackrabbit. We don't know whether it has gone neuratic, rheumatic or democratic, but it has gone something, and if this colyum sounds to you like a one-handed, left-handed raving you will know what's the matter.

We stopped at McPherson, Kansas, to call on Mr. Woolbridge, who operates the Tourny theatre, and he was not to be found. We told Mrs. Woolbridge of our condition and she suggested we go up to their house and she would bathe our shoulder in liniment, which was very kind of her, but we didn't feel like we could stop, so we hurried on.

At Belleville, Kansas, we pulled up to call on Sam Blair of the Blair theatre and that guy was out of town just as he usually is. We met Mrs. Blair and said that unless our shoulder got better it was quite likely this colyum would be minus for a couple of weeks or so, and when we told her that she threw up both hands and said, "Oh my Lord, we're sunk now. With this depression, poor pictures and high film rental and losing money every day and now this calamity, what next"?

When we got home we went up to the door and rapped and when our wife came to the door we said, "Madam, we trust you will pardon this seeming intrusion, but might we be privileged to pluck an icicle from the eaves of your dwelling? We haven't had a bite to eat since day after tomorrow and this will be the third day." And she replied, "No sir, you may not. I am saving those icicles to make ice cream on the Fourth of July. Avaunt, you itinerant vagabond." Now wasn't that a nice way for one's wife to talk after her perfectly good husband had been away from home for half a year? Well, that's the way with these women, if we had been the plumber or iceman it might have been different.

If you have never tried to operate a typewriter with your left hand just try it once and see how you make out, it's a lot of fun, we don't think.

So now you boys may have to try and struggle along without this colyum for an issue or two, which will be tough on you, we know, and we are going to ask Ernie to fill this space with that picture we had taken with Elisa Landi or Ralph Bellamy and that ought to help some.

Ryan Named to Manage Pathe Now Among 11 Leasing Studios

Phil Ryan, former head of Metropolitan Studios, has been signed by Radio to manage the old Pathe plant in Culver City, which will be operated as a leasing studio for independents. It is equipped to handle as many as 10 features at one time.

With the addition of Pathe, there are 11 Coast plants available for leasing. There is understood to be much competitive bidding among them. The only plants not soliciting leasing business are Paramount, Radio, MGM and Warner. Those leasing are Tec-Art, Metropolitan, Pathe, Hollywood, Standard, Associated, Sennett, Universal, Hal Roach, Fox-Western and Ambassador.

Paramount Slashes Foreign Production Program at Joinville

Paramount's production schedule at Joinville, France, during the next six months, will be limited to 15 French feature talkers and a series of French shorts, as against a peak schedule of 60 features in about 10 languages.

Joseph Seidelman, acting general foreign manager, returned this week from Joinville, where he worked out the new schedule with Robert Kane, production chief in Europe.

Clara Bow May Sign for a Series of Radio Broadcasts

Clara Bow may sign for a series of radio programs over a National Broadcasting Company network. George Frank, of the Frank and Dunlap agency, is said to be in New York ready to close the deal.

LANDSLIDE FOR VARIETY SHOWS

Public Gives Tremendous Majority Against Double Feature Practice

Readers of the Chicago Times voted 5 to 1 against double features and in favor of diversified entertainment.

Hays Public Preference voting shows that entire public, highbrows and lowbrows alike, want action comedy.

And now, a direct vote of theatre patrons shows that the paying public wants short subjects and variety entertainment. Customers of the Heights Theatre, a representative suburban first run house in Cleveland, voted 76 per cent in favor of a single feature and a program of short subjects.

Your public has demanded variety shows. Millions of fans will be reading about Educational Pictures in these magazine ads in April and May.

THE JUNIOR SHOW

by
RITA C. McGOLDRICK

WITH this issue the Junior Show department is six months old. In this time it has developed into a lusty and loudly vocal infant. Before another year has passed we may hope it to have become one of the most important children of the motion picture theatre family.

The letters that pour into the mail addressed to the Junior Show demonstrate that the theatre man is beginning to see the practical business aid and goodwill that lie in this field of action. And may we pause a moment to say that it is extremely fine of so many theatre managers to take the time to write us such full and definitely helpful reports of their experience in dealing with special shows for children? In this issue it is a pleasure to present the stories of some of our correspondents whose ideas, methods of procedure and results should be an encouragement to many others.

This Department Offers You

A selection of the month's best pictures. . . . A HERALD Service.
Report of Weekly Radio Broadcast on News and Notes of the Studios, and a Review of the Week's Best Pictures. . . .
Helpful Literature for Those Making Public Addresses. . . .
A Motion Picture Study Program.

SCHOOL AND SCREEN

Letters of Introduction to Club Leaders in Your Locality.
Detailed Information on the Formation and Development of Junior Motion Picture Clubs.
A postal card will bring you any one, or all, of these pamphlets without cost.

Warner's Salem (Ore.) Theatres

2,200 Children Registered in Club

The city manager of this circuit writes:

"We operate our club in accordance with the regular Mickey Mouse Club plans. After a great deal of experimenting, we found that a special kiddie matinee held Saturday morning before noon would not pay in this location. We therefore changed the starting time of our Mickey Mouse Club to 1 p.m. and devote one hour to these activities just prior to opening our regular program.

"Tieups have been made with various merchants who supply us with prizes for the children, either gratis or at a greatly reduced price. We entertain them with dancing and acts from the dancing and art schools of the city. These schools furnish us with juvenile acts consisting of dancers, singers, monologists, etc., weekly and have from five to ten acts.

"We make it a point to run features on this program which are suitable for smaller children to see. In addition to our regular program, we give them a good serial as well as a new or repeat cartoon booked especially for the first afternoon show on Saturdays.

"Our attendance at these matinees has proved the advantage of this method of operating the Mickey Mouse Club as it has grown from 250 to 300 at the time we ran the morning matinees to an attendance of 1,000 children when running the shows just prior to our regular matinee. We have also found from experience that the adult attendance on the early show is a great deal larger than it is when running a special morning matinee.

"Keeping Faith"

"We make it a point to never break faith with these children and when we promise any kind of an attraction or feature, we leave absolutely nothing unturned to deliver as promised. The box-office possibilities of these kiddie matinees is unlimited. We feel that in making a friend of a child in a family, we make a friend of the entire family.

"Another advantage of running the Mickey Mouse Club in the afternoon is the fact that a great number of mothers have their weekend shopping to do on Saturdays and it is a relief to them to leave their children in our care while they do this.

Successful Results

"The name of our club is the 'Warner Brothers Elsinore Mickey Mouse Club.' We have the standard Mickey Mouse membership buttons, officer's buttons and a very attractive membership card. All our members are registered, our total registered membership being 2,200.

"Each week we receive a one-column reader in the local newspapers with a 'Mickey Mouse Notes' headline. This column is written by one of our staff and written along newsy lines, commenting on the show of the previous week and advising the children of what may be expected at the current club meeting. We feel that this column is invaluable to us."

Paramount Theatre, Rutland, Vt.

"Every Saturday morning we have a special Kiddie Club performance. At these shows we present only certain approved features, being guided entirely by School and Screen.

"Children fill out application blanks and mail or bring them to the theatre. We in turn mail to each member a small membership card, and we keep a copy of this information in our files.

"This list comprises our mailing list, and also gives us the birthday and age of every child. On their birthday, a special card is mailed them bearing a message of greeting and allowing them admittance along with a friend at one of our regular performances.

"Each membership card is numbered, and every Saturday morning ten children are admitted free.

Prizes

"Toys are also given out to children. We try to arrange it so that different children win prizes each week, so that there is no repetition.

"So far, this idea has met with approval and commendation of both the Parents and the Federation of Women's Club in Rutland.

Educational Talks

"We also endeavor to have at each show some wellknown person of the city talk about one certain subject. To date, we have had the mayor on 'Citizenship'; commissioner of public safety on 'Safety'; a bank president on 'thrift', and others along the same line. They speak for only a few minutes, never more than five, and it proves to be a growing thing.

"The talks aren't too long for the children, as we try not to have them bored by them, and the speakers try to talk their language.

"This is but a brief outline of our activities covering but the working plan of our shows. Should there be anything else, we should be happy to supply you with further information. And this theatre is most grateful for your helpfulness and interest.

"On the reverse of Paramount's Pledge Card are the following promises:

"The member noted on the reverse side pledges and promises:

1. To always remember and obey the rules of his parents and teachers.
2. To always endeavor to attain good marks in School.
3. To always endeavor to be a gentleman or a lady.
4. To do one Good Deed Each Day.
5. To attend each and every meeting of the Club.
6. To be careful when crossing streets and roads.

"Remember—The Club meets every Saturday morning at the Paramount Theatre, Rutland, Vermont."

Forty Brooklyn Theatres

Mr. George Langbart and Mr. Monty MacLevy, division superintendents of the forty theatres of the Fox Circuit in Brooklyn, which have been taken over by the Randforce Amusement Company, under the direction of Samuel Rinzler and Lewis Frisch, have announced an endorsed picture policy based on the School and Screen service and the Junior Show as outlined in these departments. Mr. George Langbart writes with a good deal of enthusiasm:

"We are ready to make the grand experiment! Here are forty theatres lined up ready to follow School and Screen's outline exactly. At the meeting of the forty managers on Wednesday, final details will be worked out. We have booked all the pictures you suggested for Boys' Week, Music Week, Mothers' Day, Flower Week and are grateful to you for the help that you have given us in advance of these dates. The Boy Scouts will cooperate with us for Boys' Week, and the new Better Films Council of Brooklyn will send letters to surrounding schools encouraging cooperation in behalf of higher grade entertainment. At each one of our theatres a trailer will announce Endorsed Pictures.

"We know you will like to hear from us that School and Screen is directly responsible for this whole campaign and we will appreciate any further suggestion that comes through that department."

Burlington, Vermont

"It will interest you to know that the Better Films Council in Burlington is now made up of practically all of the women's organizations in this city. These include the Catholic Daughters of America, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Athens Club, the Federated Clubs of Burlington, the Jewish Women's Society, and a number of smaller groups. Reports of the activities of the Council are distributed by Council members to their clubs, to the press and theatre managers. The new work of the Council is to sponsor Junior Shows and last week 'Alice in Wonderland' won a fine audience. Local theatre managers are interested and express their willingness to cooperate with the Council in an effort to make the films fit for children to see.—Miss Theodora Agnes Peck."

Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs

Springfield Chapter

The active Motion Picture Council of Springfield, winning fine cooperation from the newspapers of that city, selects each week from the various national lists of endorsed pictures those films it considers of particular interest to the community. This bright and newsy column, written as a volunteer service, is carried regularly in the following newspapers: Springfield Republican, Springfield Union, Springfield Daily News and Forest Park Times. The following pictures, announced for family audiences, received the value of this free publicity during the past week:

"'The Expert,' 'Business and Pleasure,' 'Fireman Save My Child,' 'The Saddle Buster,' 'Tarzan, the Ape Man,' 'Zane Grey's South Sea Adventure,' 'Explorers of the World,' 'Carnival Boat,' 'The Lightning Warrior' (serial), 'The Texas Gun Fighter' (Western), 'Texas Cyclone' (Western), 'Air Eagles,' 'Sunshine Susie,' 'Polly of the Circus.'

"For adults and young adults: 'The Heart of New York,' 'The Lost Squadron,' 'Men Like These' (British), 'A Waltz by Strauss' (German with English titles), 'Cavalier of the West,' 'Broken Lullaby,' 'The Man Who Played God,' 'Wayward,' 'Final Edition' (mystery), 'Disorderly Conduct.'

"While a few of these pictures may have been released, the Council suggests that these people who are interested may clip this list for future reference."

Bronx Parents Organization

The Parents Association of Public School 26 in the Bronx, represented by one of its members, has this to say of its own activities:

"Our Motion Picture Committee has made what we believe to be the first practical step to meet the problem of better motion pictures for our community in a highly practical way. By 'highly practical' we mean that no attempt is made to reform anybody or force moral standards upon anybody, or to induce movie people to do anything that violates their soundly established commercial practices.

"In cooperation with the local theatre manager we have worked out a program that segregates the children from the adults, and in special money-making (it is hoped) performances supplies them with movie fare that is not alone educational but also entertaining in the thrill language that means so much to children. They resent and are bored by the stuffy film even more quickly than adults and are equally averse to being 'uplifted'.

"Inasmuch as all this does not harm movie producers from the profit standpoint, but if properly conducted may even win back for them their child audiences, they are likely to produce more subjects suitable for this sort of exploitation, the lack of which is the only difficulty at the present time.—Frances A. Lesser."

Welfare Versus Sex

One of our best letters came from an active theatre manager in Virginia whose name at this writing, for various reasons, we will not list. In a highly amusing message he tells us:

"Well, we had our meeting, and it is now up to the good ladies on the committee with me to select pictures for certain nights in the future. I must confess, however, that most of these ladies, or for that matter most of those attending the meeting, I would not consider picture fans. They are, rather, welfare workers, who have been told that most pictures are too sexy and not fit for children to see. The chairman replied that of course they were not in a position to criticize the fare offered at my theatre unless they attended and saw the pictures offered there. Thinking to please them I changed 'Two Kinds of Women' to 'This Reckless Age,' but the attendance was thin.

"Now I have offered to set aside one night each week for pictures of their selection, provided they promised to get behind such selections to see that they were patronized. Whether they will or not time alone can tell, but in the meantime I am doing my part. Thanks for adding my name to your files for literature, pertaining to this movement."

Columbia's Buck Jones' Rangers

Dr. Harold Davis Emerson, who has developed an active and enthusiastic club membership among the boys of the country under the leadership of Buck Jones, has something to say for the box office value of Junior Clubs. His letter states:

"You will be interested in the attached material which shows the rapid growth of the Buck Jones Rangers Club of America. Thus far we have organized over 300,000 boys and girls. We are daily receiving letters from parents, teachers, and organizations like the Boy Rangers and the Boy Scouts of America, who are offering their cooperation.

"This organization for boys and girls has been widely endorsed by clubs and Parent-Teacher Associations. The thousands of interested children have proved themselves to be a powerful word-of-mouth channel of advertising for the theatres sponsoring the clubs. Theatre owners everywhere are finding it one of their best patronage builders and are enthusiastically planning for the special matinees for youngsters.

"The Rangers keep the theatre-owners out of the red and help him to greater profits. It means that a national organization of enterprising boys have endorsed your theatre and are out boosting it. The volume of such exploitation cannot be estimated. Every exhibitor owes it to himself to see that his theatre is designated as the home of a troop of Buck Jones Rangers."

CHICAGO

The many friends of Joe Hopp, pioneer film man who is Democratic candidate for clerk of the supreme court in the April 12 primaries, are rallying behind Joe to put him over with a bang. Mr. Hopp is as well known to exhibitors nationally as he is in Chicago and Illinois. In 1908 he attended the first meeting of film exchange managers ever held in the United States. Later he founded the exhibitors association of Chicago, of which he was president for two terms. For three terms following this he was president of the Illinois theatre owners' organization and headed the Illinois delegation to Cleveland when the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' of America was founded. He was elected vice-president of the MPTOA.

Shifts Booking Personnel

Leon Netter, head of the Publix booking department, has made the following changes in personnel: J. J. Deitch, formerly in charge in Des Moines, Salt Lake City, Omaha and Minneapolis, has been named assistant to Netter; William Borack replaces Jack Marpole in Salt Lake City, Marpole being named manager of the Paramount at Provo, Utah. Dave Samuelson has taken over Borack's duties at the home office.

ECHOES FROM THE SOUTHLAND!

A MAN may possess an unusual abundance of ideas. He may be far more creative in show-merchandising than his brother managers. He may present a "front" that would be a credit to any theatre. He may be, socially, a marvelous mixer and "hale fellow well met." Yea, he may be all of these and more. But if he lacks enthusiasm,—curtains. He can't mean much to the theatre or himself.

In the course of one's travels, one encounters all classes of showmen and theatre managers. Some are perpetually tired and complaining of how hard they are working and how many hours they are on the job. Yet, strange as it sounds, they seem to accomplish very little for all those hours and efforts.

They probably lack enthusiasm. We have met up with many a showman who has accomplished twice as much in half the time because they possessed enthusiasm and to such an extent that it made itself felt to all whom they contacted. Many shining examples of such enthusiasm are to be found in the organization operating in Miami, Florida under the name of Wometco Theatres.

Despite the usual number of drawbacks and tough business competition, they go about their business with a smile and an enthusiasm that would be hard to parallel in other spots in this country. We are not here to sing the praises of those who can bring such a happy condition about; but it does speak volumes for the men at the head of that circuit.

After all is said and done, it takes lots more than home office pep letters and hollow compliments to key up a group of men to go out and battle for business in the face of many obstacles. That they succeed is evidence enough that any other methods are wrong.

ENTHUSIASM, however, did not start and stop with the Wometco boys. We witnessed at first hand the marvelous campaign engineered by Harry Weiss of the Miami Paramount Theatre for Metro's "Tarzan" and we were almost as happy as Harry when we stood in that lobby and watched the crowds growing until they were spread out into the street waiting for the break of the show.

Weiss is a good contender for the Tarzen prize money contest and his efforts will probably attract the attention of others as they did us.

BY this time most every theatre manager is aware of the fact that one of the greatest showmen of recent years is none other than Henry Ford. No doubt they encountered the advance campaign for the new V-8 Fords in their cities as we did on the trek through Florida and the amount of interest worked up over the impending arrival of these new low-priced cars must have resulted in the same big crowds that have been storming the local Ford showrooms since their arrival.

If you followed the progress of the advance announcements; the mystery surrounding the prices, appearance, etc., of the new cars, then you know what it means to create and build up interest in a coming attraction. If you can duplicate Henry's achievement in presenting a great picture as he did in his presentation of a new car, then you are entitled to the distinction of being a master showman.

AT one stop at our trip we caught a screening of the trailer on "Ladies of the Jury" and brothers' we would indeed be lax if we failed to express our admiration for the selling qualities of that trailer.

The talking sequences, the animation, the art work and particularly the text, were all aimed at one thought; to make them want to see the picture. As far as we are concerned it accomplished such a purpose. It was without a doubt one of those kind of trailers that honestly do sell the patron on a coming attraction. (Pat Garyn et al will please take a bow.)

ROUND Table Golf enthusiasts will please take note that the impossible has come to pass. After a work out at Hialeah Park Course, your 'umble chairman woke Sonny Shepherd at the stroke of seven (?) and dragged him off to the Miami Beach Municipal course where he proceeded to trim him—at eighteen holes of goll-uf. But the real miracle lies (and that's the right word) in the fact that we broke a hundred doing it.

Which was very gratifying to me and mortifying to Sonny, who had been trying to impress upon us his prowess at club swinging. But we take that last crack back. He was good at club swinging. In fact too good. He swung often and missed. Being honest we called every stroke on him too. (Nize people.)

With that hundred finally broken you may expect to see us pop out on your local sports sheets as potential champion—or what have you. There's no nut like a golf nut and every time you kid yourself into thinking that your game is improving you go out and dub all over the lot.

SOME SLANTS USED BY HARRY STOWELL UP IN MIDDLETOWN

Here are a few of the excellent stunts recently used to good advantage by Harry C. Stowell, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Middletown, N. Y.

As a special inducement to the kiddies to attend the Saturday matinee, a tie-up was made with a local clothing merchant whereby he paid for 800 kiddie star photos; 200 of which were given to the first 200 kiddies attending each Saturday matinee during the month. This stunt proved very successful as 300 children lined up at the box office before opening. And the tie-up was of no expense to the theatre whatsoever.

An ice cream company was sold on the idea of furnishing 1,200 bricks of ice cream which were distributed at the theatre at the close of a Saturday matinee performance. The ice cream company paid for two young ladies in uniform to hand out the ice cream to patrons as they filed out of theatre. This tie-up was of no expense to the theatre and proved very successful as receipts for the matinee were considerably higher than average.

Stowell has effected a tie-up whereby two sets of five tires each will be given away at the theatre. This contest will run two weeks whereby a set will be given away each week to each successful contender. The coupons, lobby display and all expenses pertaining to the tie-up will be borne by the dealer. The dealer will also insert two ads in the paper each week, selling the tie-up and current picture. There will also be distributed 10,000 heralds of which the theatre will have one entire page to sell the coming attraction and at the same time sell the tie-up.

We can see from above that Stowell has been following his usual active pace in showbusiness and we're glad of the opportunity to pass along the information for the benefit of his fellow showmen. We'll be looking for further news from Middletown in reference to what this club member has been doing to pep up spring business.

CANIDAS COVERED A WIDE ZONE WHEN HE SOLD BROWN PICTURE

Selling an attraction in Olean, N. Y., doesn't necessarily mean that effort is confined to city limits, as is evidenced by the campaign made on "Fireman, Save My Child" by James Canidas, manager of the Haven Theatre. Tear sheets we have at hand indicated that this picture was heavily plugged in four other towns adjacent to Olean, all papers carrying display ads and accompanying readers of generous proportions. The small photo shows a sample of newspaper advertising.

One of the photos shows an ancient horse-drawn fire wagon used years ago in the city. Canidas ran this around Olean and out of town for three days prior to opening. One of the old fire bells was rung as the wagon made its route. While very faint, a glance under the marquee will show a special display made for the occasion.

In addition to the above, 5,000 heralds headed "He'll be wearing Red Pajamas when he comes" and carrying comic head cuts of Brown and horses. These were distributed in Olean and surrounding towns. Three window displays of old fire apparatus were also arranged with merchants.

Use of the fire wagon bally and all readers in out-of-town papers were secured gratis, which, of course, was smart trading on the part of Canidas. He is hereby listed as another entrant in the current campaign on this picture for prizes offered by Warner Bros. and we wish him the customary good luck. In the meantime we'd like to get a further line on what this showman is doing for show-business up in his town.

Paid Tribute to Sousa

Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., did not forget the part played in the music of this country by John Phillip Sousa, veteran bandmaster who died recently.

House lights were dipped while the orchestra, all standing, inserted "Taps" into the usual overture, "Light Cavalry," and no one was seated during the eulogy of Sousa that came over the microphone. This minute service was a part of each performance during the period Sousa was lying in state.

HICKEY USED AUTHOR INSTEAD OF HORROR ANGLE ON POE FILM

Instead of playing up Gorillas and other gruesome angles in "Rue Morgue," Duke Hickey, 16-cylindered exploiteer for Universal, concluded to feature Edgar Allan Poe when covering the assignment for the World Premiere of this picture at the RKO Keith Memorial Theatre, Boston, Mass.

Now it happened that Hickey's family owned a reproduction of one of the most famous paintings ever made of Poe, the Valentine Portrait which hangs in the Poe Shrine and Museum in Richmond, Va. So he sent for it, had a photographic reproduction made and then lined up his material for a MAMMOTH Edgar Allan Poe DRAWING COMPETITION.

Armed with photo and accompanying data, he approached the desk of the "Boston Traveller," which he had been told stood at the top of the heap of Boston newspapers and had never stooped so low as to lend its name to any kind of a contest. Keith's told him he was nuts to even consider such a thing. However, the theatre did agree to contribute $30 prize money and some guest tickets if the deal could be put across elsewhere.

Bostonian traditions and hard-boiled editors have no terrors for the Hickeys. Duke crashed the gate and finally arrived in the sanctum sanctorum of one Harold F. Wheeler, managing editor of the city's straightest stepping newspaper. After weeping profusely on Wheeler's shoulder and pointing out that an art contest would not be beneath the dignity of even the "Boston Traveller" and that some prize money would be gratefully received by some of the Boston citizens in these hard times, the deal was at length agreed upon.

The story was scheduled to appear for three days, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday; however, after its first appearance it was yanked. That night the managing editor concluded that he had been tricked into something in an unguarded moment and that an art contest was too limited in appeal to amount to a damn. So next day he 'phoned Duke and advised him to take a day off and study up on the background of the bean industry.

Then things happened! The single story that went into the Tuesday issue brought such a quantity of Poe sketches into the newspaper offices that two secretaries had to be assigned to take care of them. This acted like a sniff of snow to the Desk and the yarn was again picked up as a move that had been championed by the paper from the start. On the following Monday a smash story was used to feature the winners of the contest, judged, of course, by the paper's noted portrait-artist. Honorable mention was also given to the many winners of guest tickets to see the picture.

Permission to make a display of the drawings in the Grand Lounge of the Keith Memorial was almost as difficult to obtain as cooperation from the editor. That Lounge is one of the most sacred things in the theatre, even if it doesn't produce anything material in dollars and cents. However, Duke pointed out that every entrant in the contest would bring friends and family to see the exhibit and finally secured permission to hang up some Monk's cloth for the display. The accompanying photo will bear out this angle, as will tear sheets we have at hand regarding the forepart of this article.

This same stunt has been worked along with subsequent campaigns made by Hickey on "Rue Morgue" and he states that it clicked each and every time. So we're passing it along to his brother Club members with his compliments. Certainly, he deserves a great deal of credit for overcoming all the obstacles attached to the Boston effort. Incidentally, the sketch idea can be applied to other pictures adapted from the pen of famous authors.

FLAM ARRANGED TWO DEBATES TO EXPLOIT THE DREYFUS PICTURE

Debates played the important part in the campaign made on 'Dreyfus Case" by David Flam, manager of the State Theatre, Johnstown, Pa., along with special display cards, no mention being made of the historical angle to the picture in newspaper ads.

Two prominent attorneys battled over the right and wrong of the famous case before 450 people and the City High School held a public debate on the same subject. In the latter case passes were given to the winning team. A rabbi further publicized the picture by delivering a sermon on it on opening night.

Words concerning Flam's activities down in Johnstown have been few and far between since he located in that section of the States, but they say no news is good news so we'll let it go at that. But, seriously, Dave, take a little time off some night and knock off an account of some recent stunting campaign you've made so we can pass the dope along.

PUBLISH YOUR FEATURE STARTING TIME!

Newspapers as a rule will gladly carry a special box giving the starting time of your feature picture if you see that they have such information regularly. But make sure that it is accurate so that those who learn to depend on it will not be walking in on the middle of the picture.

Stress the starting time of the last feature at night as this will encourage those who cannot attend the earlier showings and convince them that they can see the full feature.

This information should likewise be carried in your programs, in front of the box office and possibly in your newspaper ads. This is an important slant and ought to be watched a whole lot more carefully than before.

GREENE PULLED NEW ONE WITH CAMPAIGN ON MOTHERS-IN-LAW

Prompted by the thought that there are well meaning, conscientious mothers-in-law in this world and that the species have been much maligned, A. L. Greene, manager of the Tuxedo Theatre, Brighton Beach, N. Y., recently advertised through the medium of his house program that a "Perfect Mother-In-Law" Contest would be held to give the ladies a chance to refute the many accusations made against them.

In other words, the program asked, "What constitutes the Perfect Mother-In-Law? The Tuxedo management believes that somewhere in Brighton or Coney Island there exists one. We're certain of this and willing to back up the contention in cold U. S. Gold to the tune of 3 cash prizes: 1st, $10; 2d, $5, and 3d, 3.50. Here's How: Mothers-in-law will be given one minute before the microphone to prove that They Are It! Their fate shall rest with the audience. Enter your name with the manager now!"

So Greene's message read, and fortified by his shrewd, psychological observation that the urge to appear on the stage is still inherence in the modern mother-in-law denied a chance in earlier days to do her stuff before an audience, 42 entrants pledged themselves to tell the world why their methods of mother-in-lawing were a blessing instead of a hindrance to humanity.

We've heard of all kinds of contests in show business but this is the first time we've ever heard of one being pulled in defense of the mother-in-law. Anything that can be accomplished along these lines for the better, however, has our wholehearted endorsement and we'll certainly have to hand it to Greene for displaying such ingenious originality as to ideas. It's a marvelous movement! But you haven't heard how the night turned out and neither have we. We hope the promoter is in good health and suffered no serious consequences following the staging of his novel, philanthropic act. Maybe he'll send along details in the near future and then we'll let the rest of you in on what took place.

He also tried out another gag a short time ago, addressed this time in the program to "GIRLS who want to get married." The notice continued with the statement that the theatre would make it well worth while for some modern maiden who would like to annex a Complete Bridal Outfit, imported by a well known Fashion Shop in the district. Further copy stated: "The trousseau includes (pardon our blushes) a Dance Set, panty and bandeaux to match; Chemise, for the girl who knows; Slip, to fit a graceful contour; Night Gown, of delicate hand embroidered lace for a discriminating maiden, and a Box of Hosiery of sheerest chiffon." If it came to pass that the award was won by a gentleman, it was stated that it would be auctioned off to the highest bidder.

With all this effort directed to the feminine element in his neighborhood, Greene ought to have a pretty good stand-in. Thanks for sending along the tips, Al., but don't forget to let the boys know how that mother-in-law gag came out. Gag—that's the right word. Al, a Mother-In-Law Gag.

ATTRACTIVE FRONT

The week of Feb. 9th to 15th was observed as Lincoln Week by J. S. Salmon, manager of the Riverside Theatre, New York City. The front was attractively dressed with silhouette figures of Lincoln at either side of entrance and the box office was enclosed with slab effect material to resemble the exterior of a log cabin. The window was draped to make it appear a real window

ORLOVE INTRODUCED LOCAL POLITICIANS FROM THEATRE STAGE

They take their politics seriously out in the North Side of Milwaukee where Louis Orlove manages the Uptown Theatre and not long ago 18 candidates announced their intentions to run for Alderman of the district.

Now Louis is something of a politician himself, both as a theatre man and neighborhood factor, and forthwith laid plans to better acquaint the candidates with prospective voters through the medium of his theatre. So he arranged to have half of them presented on the stage on one night and the balance on the following night. Letters passing each candidate and one other person into the theatre were sent out to the group. It was stated that a well known local Doctor, attached to the neighborhood sanitarium, would introduce the several men. It was also arranged with the Police Department to have on hand two men to take care of any hecklers in the audience.

In the larger cities candidates for district office find it difficult to meet all adherents face to face, hence it appears that Orlove's move is another instance of how this showman consistently bids for the good will of his neighborhood. A stunt of this sort takes up but a short space on the evening's program and it's one that ought to be interesting to many of his fellow Club members. Some time ago we were led to believe that Louis himself had Aldermanic aspirations. How about this, Louis?

Nat Holt Now D. M.

Nat Holt, formerly city manager of Fox Theatres in Wichita, Kas., has been promoted to the post of Division Manager through a recent announcement made by E. C. Rhoden, in charge of the Kansas City district. Holt will have charge of theatres in Wichita, Arkansas City, Dodge City, Liberal, Newton, Winfield, Wellington, Eldorado, Lyons, Hutchinson, Hays and Salina. D. S. Lawlor, Wichita public relations man for Fox, succeeds to Holt's old post.

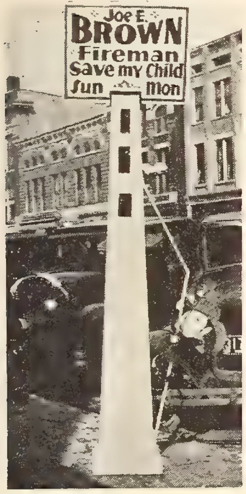
VARIETY OF EFFORT PUT FORTH BY LEON PICKLE ON 'FIREMAN'

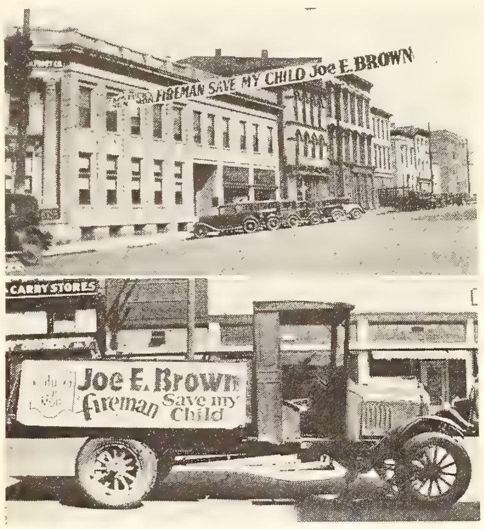
Street ballys, tie-ups and a novel outdoor display are listed among efforts put forth on "Fireman Save My Child" by Leon Pickle, manager of the Kentucky Theatre, Henderson, Ky., in a recent campaign he made on that picture.



He tied-up with a coffee shoppe for the promotion of seven free dinners each day during run of picture. One side of a card issued for this occasion was entirely devoted to picture copy and one-quarter of the other side also gave it mention. Certain marks on the card entitled the holder to a free meal. Theatre copy played up the "nutty" angle such as, "Let's Be Silly—walk down the street in a bathing suit—bring home a girl for the ice-man—do a spring dance on the sidewalk—do anything—be as nutty as you like for Henderson is celebrating the arrival of Joe E. Brown," etc., etc.

One of the photos on this page shows the big street banner used one week in advance and which could be seen for two blocks away. The other portion of the photo shows one of the bannered trucks that went into action as a result of a tie-up made with an ice company. These also circulated about town several days in advance of opening.

The small upright photo illustrates a display made in the form of a signal tower originally used on "Danger Lights" and converted into a miniature building for this occasion. Whether discernible or not, there's a cut-out of Joe E. Brown climbing a hook and ladder to rescue a doll hanging from one of the small windows. The building was lighted by a single 50-watt lamp placed behind amber and rose gelatin and connected with the marquee flasher, giving the effect of a conflagration. The display was set up on the sidewalk with a sign stop announcing title and playdates.



The lobby was attractively decorated for the occasion and fireman hats, promoted from the local fire department, were worn by ushers, doorman and cashier a day in advance

There's one thing we'd like to point out about Pickle's campaign and that's the cost. All work, as outlined above, was accomplished to the tune of $4.85, which, to our way of thinking, was getting away with a lot. So, Leon, your efforts are herewith submitted for inspection by the worthy Judges who will determine what showmen are eligible for awards Warner-First National is offering for best campaigns on the picture. Good luck and let us hear from you again.

Rosenberg Gets Liberty

The Liberty Theatre, Spokane, Wash., formerly owner by Ray Grombacher and lately reported sold at public auction to Earl Sinks, Los Angeles theatre man, will fly the banner of Al Rosenberg owning to priority of the latter's bid, according to a report in the Spokane "Spokesman-Review." After the Sinks bid has been received it developed that Rosenberg had bid 10 per cent more. The latter also operates the Egyptian and Neptune theatres in Seattle and has others at Everett and Bellingham. Tom Olsen will manage the Liberty.

THE TWO-FOR-ONE GAG IS BACK!

We have received many requests for information about the proper handling of the Two-for-One ticket idea in connection with the building of business.

A community theatre located outside of New York recently used this idea to excellent returns by concentrating the distribution of such tickets at points not too close to the theatre where the regular patrons could get hold of them too readily.

Ten thousand tickets were printed, a thousand on each of ten different colored stock. Selecting the communities where a play for patronage was to be made they used a different color for each community so that they could see where the best returns were coming from.

We do not advocate the use of two-for-one's indiscriminately. To flood your neighborhood with them is to invite your own steady patrons to use them and thereby cut your receipts down considerably. This would hardly be practical or profitable. Their use should be confined to attracting new trade and getting people from sections which may not be giving your theatre the play you deserve.

In addition to giving the merchants a good supply of these tickets they also posted a window card in the store window and inside the store which stated that the Two-for-One tickets were being given with each purchase.

The idea has been responsible for a building up of business amounting to almost twenty-five per cent. And that's some increase in these present days of falling off in theatre receipts. When the Two-for-One's start running low it is safe to say that you have won a large number of new patrons to the theatre who will continue to patronize you just the same.

NEWSPAPER USED TO GOOD ADVANTAGE BY MANAGER E. SIMONIS

Newspapers figured in two tie-ups recently used by E. M. Simonis, manager of the American Theatre, Pittston, Pa., when selling "Emma" and "Unholy Garden."

Over 600 answers were received as the result of inserting an eight-inch ad with just the word 'Emma" and instructing readers to write what they thought of Marie Dressler in 20 words in that space. Single guest tickets were awarded the winners.

The idea behind the other gag was to write "Unholy Garden" as many times as possible on a piece of paper the same size as that of the theatre's ad that appeared in the paper that day. Over 300 answers attested to the popularity of the move.

We can readily see that Simonis has been listening in on radio programs, but that's all right. No matter where a gag originates it takes some thought and action to adapt it to other fields. These are interesting because in both instances the reader was forced to turn to the ad to determine size.

NICHOLS STRONG ON ATTRACTIVE FRONTS!

Don Nichols, manager of the Warner Broadway Theatre in Charlotte, N. C., must lay awake nights planning the fronts for the theatre. His big ambition in life it seems is to make the front for each picture more original and more attractive than the preceding one. Note the distinct type of front he used for "Safe in Hell." Let's have some more of your fronts, Don, we're sure the boys will be glad to see them.

Keeping Up With The Times!

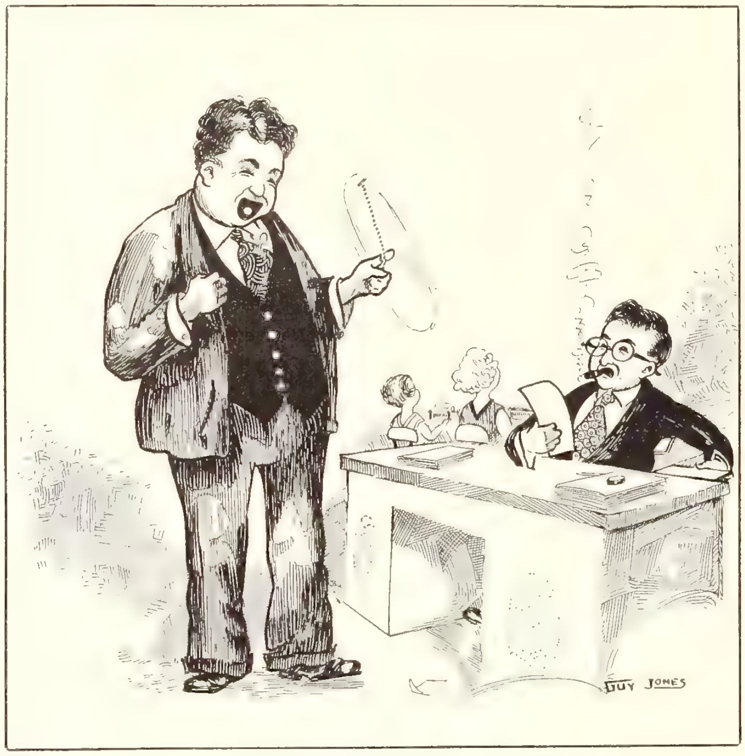
By GUY JONES



Peeking through the home office key-hole we observe two big shoes of the Hokum Chain Theatres, Inc., BVD., in heavy conference. The subject under discussion appears to be the present necessity for acquiring control in swinging a watch chain and also the easiest way of making yourself comfortable as you puff on your five-cent cigar.

VARIETY OF STUNTS RECENTLY USED DOWN IN TAMPA BY WEISS

A line on the activities of Alfred S. Weiss, Jr., manager of the Park Theatre, Tampa, Fla., discloses that he has been using a variety of gags on recent pictures.

He revived the Subpoena for "Silent Witness" and the message inside was addressed to "Mr. and Mrs. Thrill Seeker." It was returnable to the Park Theatre and closing copy stated that jurors must pay from 10 to 35 cents for each attendance.

"Dasha, a Beautiful Persian Princess," also materially increased matinee trade a short time ago and for that occasion a card was issued carrying sketch of "Dasha" on one side and "She'll Tell You Anything You Want to Know" copy on the other.

A tag headed "this is not a Police Ticket —just a reminder that, etc., etc., 'Manhattan Parade' Will Be at the Park," was used to good advantage on that picture when distributed in advance in autos. A novelty blotter in the form of a six-inch rule was widely distributed for "Ben Hur" and helped advertise that picture.

Several thousand "Hello" cards on "Union Depot" were used at hotels with balance of copy stating that the theatre management hoped the stay in town would be pleasant and that the picture would be certain to add to enjoyment. Other cards for "Men Only" were also passed out and read on one side, "Something New! 'Union Depot'" The other side read, "Meet Me at Union Depot If You Want to Get the Thrill of Your Life." A tie-up with "Cryst-O-Mints" also helped publicize this picture.

By this time Weiss has held his "Leap Year Stage Wedding" and we feel sure that it was put over in a big way. Next time we tell you about this Round Tabler's work we'll hope to include an account of how he staged that event. In the meantime—the usual farewell and good luck.

ACTIVITIES ON "TARZAN"

As the result of M-G-M's announcement that prizes will be awarded for outstanding campaigns made on "Tarzan, The Ape Man," showmen are already sending in photos and other data to show what they did to exploit this picture.

Two of these at hand, one from Henry Weiss, manager of the Paramount theatre, Miami, Fla., and the other from Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Valentine, Toledo, show the selling possibilities attached to the film. Both houses did a remarkable business and the campaigns embraced a variety of angles. Descriptions of both will appear in this department in forthcoming issues.

So get busy you Round Tablers who have played, or will play, this picture and send in your campaign to the Tarzan Contest editor, M-G-M, 1540 Broadway, New York.

BEN COHEN PUT OVER TWO EXCELLENT TIE-UPS WITH LOCAL FIRM

Two recent pictures were given a good boost at the box office by Ben Cohen, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Hazleton, Pa., through local tie-ups.

On "Mati Hari" he arranged the sale of the complete novel by getting the Chamber of Commerce to sponsor the idea. Copies were retailed for 10 cents, half of the proceeds going to Cohen and the balance to the unemployment fund. Salesmen were drafted for the occasion and each were given 100 of the books, together with a letter of identification from the Employment Service. After the theatre had received $50 the balance of the revenue was used for prizes for best sales each day.

A tie-up with a taxicab company on "Taxi" resulted in that concern furnishing cabs for a free return ride home from theatre. All the patron had to do was to submit the ticket stub, stamped by cashier, and claim the ride. And the sight of so many taxis waiting outside the theatre also helped publicize the picture. Further effort consisted of a taxi parade and the painting of "Taxi" many times over the surface of an old auto. Awards were offered those who could nearest estimate the number of times the word had been painted.

Regarding the "Mati Hari" books it is to be supposed that Cohn made a deal for a quantity of paper covered novels of book of that name and got back his cash outlay when he received the $50. However, that information is not supplied in the account we have at hand. He will probably be glad to forward word on this to any who want to try the gag on this or some other picture that can be tied in with the idea. It was a smart move to tie in the C. of C. and newspaper to push the scheme.

Arrested This Time!

Things are getting hotter over in Plainfield, N. J., where each successive Sunday show for the past several weeks at the Paramount, Oxford and Strand theatres has been productive of a summons. Last Sunday Manager Andrew Saffron was arrested, taken to police headquarters and charged with running a "disorderly" house. He was later released.

LOBBY USED FOR ADVANCE DISPLAY OF FREAKS!

FOUR-CORNERED DEAL WITH STEAMSHIP CO. PROFITABLE TO ADAMS

What amounted to a four-cornered deal between a steamship agency, a local newspaper, merchants and the theatre, turned out to be a crackerjack trade booster for Bill Adams, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Brockton, Mass., and brought joy to the hearts of two local citizens who became entitled to a two weeks cruise to the West Indies.

The deal actually originated between steamship representative, newspaper and merchants and the theatre was subsequently tied-in with the proposition, acting as a medium or depository for voting tickets issued from local stores when purchases were made. A number of leading stores were represented in the tie-up and the ballots were handled along the same lines as a popularity contest.

At a cost of but $30 over a six weeks' period the theatre shared a great deal of publicity, both in a single truck co-op promoted for the occasion and in attractive circulars issued by the promoters. As a matter of fact, the make-up of both ad and circular made it appear as though the whole deal had been engineered by the theatre. The cut on this page will serve to illustrate how this idea was carried out in the co-operative ad and front page of circular. The inside spread of the latter further carried out the co-operative ad idea and the back cover gave full information concerning the cruise.

AN INTERSTATE THEATRE

Although winter is the best time to promote a cruise to southern waters, there are many other places that will be attractive for spring and summer travel. If you are so situated that a deal such as the above could be engineered, it might be profitable for all concerned if the necessary contacts are made. Everybody wants to travel and a pair of tickets for a free cruise should be an excellent means of creating interest sales and publicity for every party concerned in the tie-up.

Running For Judge

Clarence Yeager, owner of a number of suburban theatres in Portland, Ore., is a candidate for Circuit Judge of Multnomah County.

WARM WEATHER IS NEXT!

Just as soon as Lent is over our thoughts always turn to summer and its usual warm weather and hot days. There are probably several thousand showmen who feel exactly the same way.

The importance of having your cooling and ventilating equipment in proper shape and ready to function throughout the summer is of vital importance and should be uppermost in your minds at this time.

Don't wait until you start running your equipment to find out that minor repairs and attention is required. You should take care of such details now while you still have plenty of time to get everything in tip-top shape. Silence is more than golden so make sure that your fans and blowers are not going to start squeaking and growling when you throw the switches.

Take a morning this week and go over your entire cooling plant in every detail together with your operator and any others whose work covers that phase of the theatre's operation. See that the commutators are clean, the brushes in good condition and especially that all fans are properly lubricated (oiled to you).

If the customers have to sit through one sweltering performance in your theatre, you are going to have a tough time convincing them thereafter that you have a cool or comfortable house.

THREE MINUTE DANCE PROLOGUE EFFECTIVE FOR WALTER B. ROSE

A three minute dance demonstration prior to showing of trailer was effectively used on "Dance Team" by Walter B. Rose, manager of the Strand Theatre, Brockton, Mass.

Arrangements were made with a local dance team to put on this dance demonstration; they doing the Sally-Jim step; the dance used by the two principals in the picture.

The dance team's appearance was announced by a special three-frame trailer. The novelty of this presentation caused a great deal of favorable comment and certainly gave the picture a good plug.

One of the leading local dance schools gave special instruction of the Sally-Jim step in all their classes. And made special announcement about picture and playdate, and giving guest tickets as prizes to the best dancers of the new step.

In addition to the above, Rose secured several excellent windows for co-operative displays that attracted much attention.

A neat little tie-up that undoubtedly did its full share in the putting over of this picture. We're glad to get a line on your work again, Walter, and try to keep in touch with your fellow showmen regularly.

HOF ARRANGED TO PASS OUT HERALDS AT A BOXING BOUT

A tie-up with the promoters of an amateur boxing contest secured some valuable publicity among the sporting element in his town for H. P. Hof, manager of the Bardavon Theatre, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., when selling "The Champ."

By arrangements with the promoters two days before opening of picture, 2,000 programs were furnished. The programs listed the names of the boxing contestants with the lower space, "and meet—The Champ with Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper at the Bardavon Theatre, starting Saturday."

The programs were distributed at the boxing bouts and also in cigar stores and other places where the sporting fraternity congregated. The programs proved very effective and drew to the theatre the type of patron that seldom comes.

Hof found a good way to get his message before the eyes of people who are generally regarded as free spenders even if their thoughts do run to sources of amusement other than motion pictures. However, 'Champ' was excellent fare to bait them and once inside a house there's the chance that they will become regulars.

A NEW TICKET SELLING SLANT!

Showmen who have tied up with Parent-Teacher Associations for the sale of theatre tickets to the school children can elaborate on the idea profitably by including the sale of adult tickets at the same time.

At the State Theatre in Ozone Park, L. I., N. Y., Irving Feinman, the manager, after negotiating quite a few of these tie-ups for the school children injected the adult ticket angle and found that it was even more desirable and profitable than the kiddie slant.

A few weeks back he not only handled over a thousand school children, but had them selling several thousand adult tickets. Inasmuch as the children live in a wide area around the school it resulted in bringing many new faces and patrons to the theatre where an unusually good program was presented during the two days that the tie-up covered.

Try this out yourself the next time you arrange one of those P-T shows and you'll find that you have a great money-making slant.

HERE ARE TWO GAGS THAT WERE USED BY HAROLD GABRILOVE

Insertion of names on bottom of newspaper ads and a good will gesture to needy families were included among recent selling efforts made by Harold Gabrilove, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Newburgh, N. Y.

Instead of picking names at random from a telephone directory or some similar source, he picked names of people who worked in large department stores, factories or people out of town. By following this course he hoped to not only contact new patrons, but cash in on word-of-mouth advertising.

Newspapers gave him a good break with stories when he tie-ed in with the paper for an offer of 20 guest tickets to needy families to see a current picture. In a two-column story an impression was created that the picture had been seen by the writer and considered among the best.

Getting back to the gag of using department store, etc., names to carry on bottom of newspaper ads to identify awards of guest tickets, it appears a good one for reason that the recipient will do considerable talking to friends. And the same holds true for those who live in the smaller out-of-town communities. As to his good will gesture, that story must have been ample return for the number of tickets issued.

GEORGE MEYERS MADE SNAPPY CAMPAIGN ON JOE BROWN PICTURE

Newspaper advertising and contests featured the campaign made on "Fireman, Save My Child" by George B. Meyers, advertising manager of the Princess Theatre, Mayfield, Ky.

The reproduced ad on this page will show the result of a cooperative ad promoted among local merchants. Note that the title of picture appears along left-hand margin of ad, with small boxes at right of each letter. The gag is to find missing letters that spell the title in advertisements and to insert the different advertisers' names in corresponding boxes. Guest tickets were used to stimulate interest.

We wondered who would be the first showman to tie-up in some way with the missing Lindbergh baby and one of Meyer's ads was headed, "Where is Lindbergh's Child?" There followed instructions to readers to send in a short story giving their opinions as to where the child was and who kidnapped him. Since the actual solution was not known, it was stated that the stories would be judged on style and merit as a mystery yarn. Guest tickets were offered for best "solutions." Both of the above stunts were followed by special ads made from regular exchange mats used in the New York campaign. Routine advertising was followed out with the usual one—sheets and window cards posted at advantageous spots.

On opening night Meyers arranged with the local fire department for a ballyhoo by having the trucks rush down the street and stop in front of the theatre, just as if the men were answering a fire call. The firemen ran in and out of the theatre with various equipment and kept the bells ringing for five minutes. Banners in the theatre front enabled onlookers to immediately tie-up the incident with the picture.

Considering the fact that a town the size of Mayfield is limited as to picture exploitation and that Meyers kept well within his budget, it seems as though he not only put over a darn good campaign, but injected some novel slants. He's still another contender for honors in the Warner contest on "Fireman" and we hope he'll receive whatever credit is due.

HERE'S A TRICK AMPHIBIAN BALLYHOO FROM CARTOONIST JONES!

Cartoonist Guy Jones, who has the knack of portraying his reactions to show-business in pen and ink, can do other things for his fellow Club members besides amuse them with a weekly sketch.

Get an eyefull of the sea-going ballyhoo pictured below. Right at the moment it's a trans-Atlantic steamship, but it can be changed into a sailing vessel, a square rigger or a battleship at short notice. It is twenty-seven feet long, equipped with a radio, phonograph and speaker, and its decks are strong enough to haul around a number of vaudevillians. We almost forgot to add that its locomotion is furnished by a truck chassis; furthermore, when not in motion the bally can be parked at a good spot to bring in scores of ball games and other spot news for the theatre.

See that circular looking gadget above the stacks with part of the title "Emma" on it? That's not part of the bally; it's another contrivance that Jones rigged up with a bicycle wheel and a fan motor. It's really a round banner and instead of getting a mere eight feet of banner he gets twenty-one feet as it revolves. As the occasion warrants many changes can be made in copy and other gimmicks can be hung from the bottom edges. The entire display has the additional value of animation.

If any of our Club members plan construction of the boat bally or the animated banner, we feel sure that Guy will oblige them with additional information.

PAINTING STUNT IN LOBBY GOT RESULTS FOR CHARLES BASSIN

A lobby stunt proved an excellent attention-getter for Charles Bassin, manager of the Oriental Theatre, Mattapan, Mass., when he played "Husband's Holiday."

A young artist appeared in the lobby nightly between 7 and 8:30. He painted likenesses of well known screen stars in oil. He especially featured the stars that appeared in "Husband's Holiday."

The stunt is a no-cost proposition; the brush wielder figuring the publicity he got would probably get him some business to make up for the time consumed in the theatre lobby.

Huge crowds watched him every night as he put on his painting act; all of which was helpful to the theatre.

The last time Club headquarters attempted to communicate with Bassin at the above theatre the letter was returned. In case this engages his attention we hope he'll confirm the above address or advise us just where he is located.

MAKE A DEAL WITH MATZOS DEALER AT ONCE, SAYS SMITH

If you are located in a Jewish neighborhood and haven't made your Matzos tie-up, do so at once, advises Lou Smith, impresario of the Elton Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Arrangements Lou made with a big Matzos man over in his city resulted in free printing of 5,000 circulars and the loan of two uniformed girls to pass out free pound boxes of the crackers to all lady patrons and a sample for the men. This stunt was pulled at three theatres on the same circuit and the entire expense of the deal was absorbed by the Matzos concern.

He also has a few words to say to those Club members who have yet to play off "Sooky." Four regulation bugles were promoted for this occasion through a tie-up with a local merchant and these can be hooked up with either an essay gag, numbers, etc., with the Boy or Girl Scout organizations. Lou ran the picture for two days after it played a nearby Loew house and did bang-up trade.

Smith's Matzos message is particularly directed to his many Club member friends in New York City, but it's adaptable wherever similar conditions exist. So, Hello New York; Okay, Chicago and San Francisco! Go to it and line up those Matzos merchants in time for the season, and thank Lou Smith for his timely tip.

PUBLICITY OUTLETS IN NEWSPAPER-RADIO PROMOTED BY GREENE

Many of our members have found it profitable to contribute interesting items concerning this industry to newspapers and this time it is our pleasure to record that Fred Greene, manager of the Irving Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., has become both a newspaper columnist and radio broadcaster.

Greene "columns" in a weekly newspaper that has a circulation of 26,000, and, according to reports, it is widely read.

Before starting the column, Greene wrote all the publicity representatives of the various producers, asking that he be put on their mailing list. In this way he receives all the current publicity in regards to stars and pictures. Then Greene edits it and writes up his own column, making it as terse as possible—making three copies.

On Tuesday afternoons Greene broadcasts over WBRE, using one copy as a guide and puts each item in his own words, enlarging upon each one where it is deserved and also interspersing same with personal or recorded happenings.

On Thursday evenings Greene broadcasts over WBAX for 20 minutes, using the second and third copies. This in the form of questions and answers; one of the announcers picking out questions from his copy and the answers being taken from the second copy.

Then a copy is used by the newspaper, so the one copy gives Greene three separate sources of publicity, all at no cost whatever to the theatre. This idea can be worked in any town where size and conditions are the equivalent of Wilkes-Barre.

Need a Good Manager?

The Round Table Club can put you in touch with some exceptionally fine showmen if you are in need of one of those men who CAN produce. Building up box office receipts is second nature with these men.

Send us a wire and let us help you get the right manager for that theatre you want put over big.

PREMIUMS BOOSTS BUSINESS HERE!

A corner of the lobby was all General Manager Stone needed to let the folks in the vicinity of the Capitol Theatre, South River, N. J., know that they would be getting something free on these special premium nights. Here you see the display case with a set of the dresser-ware which was distributed over a period of some thirty odd weeks. Many neighborhood houses are finding this a great stunt to boost business on off-nights.

MAURIE STAHL, zone manager for the brothers Skouras over in New Jersey, recently qualified as one of the "Month" men of this industry by having April designated by his cohorts as "Maurie Stahl Month," during which time an extensive business drive will be waged. Irving Lesser and Dan Weinberg will act as lieutenants in the Jersey City and Bergen County districts.

HENRY L. NEEDLES, Warner district manager in Connecticut, has been in conference with the Hartford Juvenile Commission on the matter of planning special film shows for children. Give 'em the needle, Henry.

W. F. BUDD recently took over operation of the Rialto Theatre, Anita, Iowa.

CHARLES JENNINGS and Donald Oakes have purchased the Lyric Theatre, Columbus Junction, Iowa, from Ralph Kelly.

BEN ASHE is in charge of the recently reopened Grand Theatre, Bemidji, Minn., a house owned by the Berger Amusement Co. and dark for the past year. New sound equipment has been installed.

MILTON KRONACHER, former Pathe Salesman in the New York City district, is going on a second honeymoon this month. On the 14th day of April he and Mrs. Kronacher will celebrate their 25th Wedding Anniversary at Atlantic City. Many readers will recall Milt as one of the go-getting, prize winning salesmen of the old Pathe organization and that he was forced to take an extended vacation on account of his health, which, we are glad to state, is improving day to day.

FASHION SHOWS ARE CLICKING!

It is most gratifying to note that our recent campaign to stimulate interest in the staging of Fashion Revues this year has met with a large measure of response from many showmen all over the country and we have received complete campaigns from most of them.

In view of the widespread interest in this great box office idea we will continue to feature Fashion Show stories and articles in subsequent issues so that by keeping all the issues on hand you will have a fine batch of material to guide you when you next stage one of these shows.

ROMANCE, ACTION AND COMEDY STRESSED IN CAMPAIGN BY STEARN

A variety of effort put forth on "Delicious" by Harry D. Stearn, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Reading, Pa., resulted in the carrying out of a bang-up campaign on that picture. Romance, action and El Brendel's comedy were stressed in newspaper advertising.

Included among advance advertising and exploitation were novel cutouts for lobby and foyer; slides and special accompaniment; a tie-up with a candy manufacturer; street ballys; radio announcements, and a trailer.

DELICIO
AIN

Following out the idea of "Scotty," the terrier in the picture, twenty imitation dogs were made from beaverboard and placed in prominent locations in the foyer, mezzanine, lobby and front of house. Copy of back of dogs read, "I am Scotty—You will see me with Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell in 'Delicious' at this theatre Soon." When the show was current these dogs were distributed in various spots in town and copy was changed to "Now Playing."

The press book tipped him off to the fact that National had made up a special slide effect for this picture and he ordered it. Then he tried all over town to get records of the songs and other music composed for the film, finally obtaining one through a Hit-A-Week dealer that gave a short sales talk on the show and a portion of the music. He promoted the use of a Panatrope from a local dealer and placed it behind the scrim. Just before the trailer came on the record was started and when it closed the scrim was hauled up and regular trailer went on.

The photo you see on this page is a reproduction of a swing display suspended between two pillars at the theatre entrance. Six-sheet cutouts of Gaynor and Farrell were used, along with mats on the floor and two of the beaverboard dogs placed to look directly at the figures.

The dog idea was again used in a tie-up made with a woman breeder of Scotch terriers, who somewhat reluctantly loaned one of her animals to take part in a street ballyhoo. A good-looking young fellow was engaged to wear a full dress costume and lead the dog around town with small sign on back reading, "We Are On Our Way To See Janet Gaynor at the Capitol Theatre, Reading." The young fellow also wore a stove-pipe hat as an additional attention-getter.

Many patrons remarked upon the beauty of the foyer display which consisted of a large beaverboard sign for each pillar in the foyer. The title "Delicious" was placed overhead and at each end. In front of the pillars were placed the large ten foot beaverboard signs with copy, "Janet and Charles In A New Musical Hit." Underneath were listed song hits and "Funny El Brendel." On the other side copy read, "Lovers Again—Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell With El Brendel—Music By Gershwin—Dates." On the other two pillars were large beaverboard signs that carried cutout title placed in front of colored crepe paper.

Other effort included the distribution of 5,000 candy kisses in bags with appropriate copy tying in picture (merchant paid all); a cutout display made up in unused inside box office with shadow box and mask, which intrigued many; a large cutout display of Gaynor and Farrell; large cutout letters of Gaynor and Farrell on marquee; overture of Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue"; marquee banner painted on both sides; window cards, and radio announcements advance and currently.

As he usually does, Stearn came through with a thorough campaign and we're glad of the opportunity to pass his ideas along the line. We have a hunch that he may have planned some sort of Easter or Spring fashion show and if he has we will see that we get information on same.

GALVIN PROFITED BY CHINESE ACT DURING SINO-JAPANESE FRACAS

While the fracas between the Chinese and Japanese was going full tilt over in Shanghai, John J. Galvin, manager of the Penn Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., cashed in on public interest in the hostilities through the fact that there was a Chinese troupe among the vaudeville acts at that time.

The husband of a Chinese girl in the act and several other members gave interesting facts and figures on the war situation from both stage and over the local radio, dwelling on angles which had apparently been overlooked by press agencies. Newspapers gave generous space to stories, mentioning that the act could be seen at the Penn.

Galvin was keenly anxious to make a good showing with his bill at that time and it looks as though he certainly wasn't passing up any opportunities when he publicized the presence of the Chinese act.

It is the policy of theatremen at all times to please as many as possible . . . this election has resulted in the sincere division of your opinions . . . FOR THIS INFORMATION . . . .

WE AGAIN THANK YOU!!!!

Our endeavor and our debt to you will be to continue to offer at all times clean, wholesome entertainment in our theatres.

EAST LIVERPOOL THEATRE OWNERS' ASS'N.

Wm Tallman, E E Bair

Above is an ad inserted in the local newspaper by E. E. Bair, manager of the State Theatre, East Liverpool, Ohio, following defeat of Sunday movies in his town. Even though the bill only lost out by a matter of twenty votes, making a recount in order, both Bair and W. H. Tallman, representing the East Liverpool Theatre Owners' Association, made their beau geste to both factions of voters.

Was that diplomacy, we ask you? We think you'll agree that it was. Note the ad states that clean, wholesome entertainment will continue to be offered. Next time the vote comes up, if the recount doesn't confirm a victory, we venture the opinion that ads of this kind will not have done any harm.

In the Saddle Again

Jack Marpole, enterprising showman who used to make 'em sit up and take notice when engaged in show-selling out in Lodi, Calif., and other West Coast towns, and lately taking care of booking duties during William Borack's absence from Salt Lake City, has again returned to the firing line as manager of the Paramount Theatre, Provo, Utah. He replaces Starr A. Duell, who has been transferred to the Orpheum, Ogden.

SILVERWATCH STILL USING MANY STUNTS TO SELL HIS SHOWS

A line on past activities of Max Silverwatch, manager of the Strand Theatre, Amesbury, Mass., has always disclosed the unloading of a lot of sleeve-tricks of the trade on the part of this energetic showman and the batch of literature, etc., in front of our eyes at the present indicates that he's still keeping the old ball rolling along. First let us call attention to the small photo, which is a likeness of Max himself, and then we'll set down a brief account of a few of his efforts in show-business.

We may be going back a bit as to pictures, but "Ambassador Bill" will do as well as anything for a starter. On this picture he found a missing letter gag effective as an interest getter. Twenty tickets were offered free to those who filled in the proper letters on the following: .il Rog..s—y.ur f.vo.ite ..plo.at of .un, f..lic, w.t and .i.do, wi.. be .t t.e War.er B.os. .trand t.eat.e Friday .nd S.tur.ay, De.em.er 4-5 in "Ambassador Bill." .e ta.es y.u on a .ila.i.us pe.so..lly co.du.ted to.. of . gla.or.us Euro..an kin.d..——I.lude .n .he ca.t are G.eta Ni.s.n, Mar..erite C.u.chill and .ad Alexa.der. The following was included as part of copy on a throw-away calling attention to the opportunity.

He also found that a long ticket, about 7x3 inches, was good publicity for "Yellow Ticket." The top contained a plug for the picture and three perforated sections below carried ads stating that the attached coupons would be good for a ten per cent discount at each merchant's store. The ads took care of the printing and distribution costs.

We've often had requests for some little trick to plug kiddie patronage for a Western or a start-off of a serial and we note that Max used a couple of these on "Rainbow Trail" and "Riders of the Purple Sage." One was a blue card on which appeared a complicated design of inter-related circles. The instructions were to "Follow the 'Rainbow Trail' out of Surprise Valley." The other card carried an illustration of a bucking broncho, which could be set in motion by the manipulation of strings. Both were obtained from a novelty company and name of same can be furnished upon request.

Other recent exploitation efforts included the occasional use of bookmarks, with appropriate copy; the much recounted "All My Life" card gag; a laugh certificate, good for 1,000 laughs on a Joe Brown picture; an envelope addressed to "Mothers Only," with enclosure, on "Sin of Madelon Claudet," and numerous other little throwaways, etc.

We also have a small photo at hand, too faint to reproduce, showing a blindfolded auto driver about to get under way for a tour of the town. Max obtained the services of a local "magician" for this stunt and it was pulled off in connection with a Kiddie Club Matinee. The magician donated his services and the car was promoted from one

CHECK THESE OFF NOW!

1—Cleaning and relamping of marquee and upright signs.

2—Brighten up the backings of your frames and displays with cool colored cards, etc.

3—Summer uniforms for the staff should be looked over, cleaned and made ready for the change.

4—Wash down or mop up with plenty of clean, fresh water the cement floors of your auditorium. Much dust and dirt accumulates during the winter which won't be cleaned through the usual hair brush sweeping.

5—Wipe off with a damp cloth all the bulbs under the marquee.

7—Clean up your changeable attraction letters. Dirt cuts down the visibility of these letters.

8—Inspect your lobby and front with a view of brightening it up for the summer months.

9—Arrange for greens of all kinds from your local florist for the lobby and foyers as well as the mezzanine and lounge rooms. It leaves a decidedly cooling effect when the patrons come in contact with them.

10—Winter sometimes plays havoc with the paint on your outside frames and display boards. A little touching up or a coat of shellac will not only preserve, but will also freshen them up considerably.

11—Check up on your chairs and see that they are tightened and repaired where necessary.

12—Inspect your carpets carefully and sew the spots or seams that are beginning to open up.

13—Give the frames of your outdoor billboards a coat of paint. A dirty, sloppy frame won't help attract attention to your one or three sheets.

14—Inspect the roofs. Kids make a practice of throwing bottles and other rubbish to the roofs to prove their throwing ability. Get such stuff off now or it will sink into the tar and roofing material when the weather turns warm.

AIRSHIP BALLY USED TO GOOD RESULTS BY FLEITIS IN KEY WEST

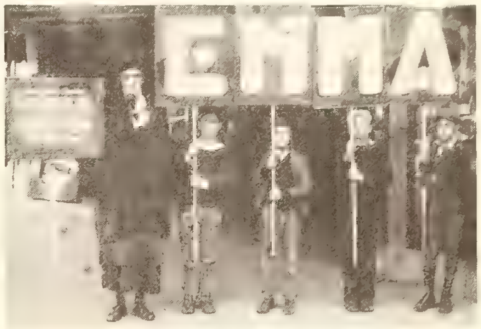
We are indebted to Manager J. F. Fleitis for the small photo of a model airship used to exploit "Dirigible" at the Strand Theatre, Key West, Fla. The ship, which in the original photo shows considerable craftsmanship, was made by Ignacio Carbonell, son of the proprietor of both Strand and Monroe Theatres in that city.

In addition to hanging the ship under the marquee, it was illuminated and carried around the city in a truck, along with a six-piece orchestra, 1,500 special hand bills were distributed en route.

The above is the first word we've had from Fleitis in some little time. Now that he's on the active list again, we hope he will make up for lost time and shoot along some more information about show-business down in Key West.

STREET BALLYHOO BY YOUNGSTERS HELPED COWAN SELL "EMMA"

Four boys and a quaint looking female impersonator made up the crew that put over an effective publicity stunt for M. E. Cowan, manager of the Piqua Theatre, Piqua, Ohio, when he played "Emma."



As you can see from the accompanying illustration, each boy carried a large cut-out letter of the title and the sign held by the gentleman with the strange looking costume directed all good citizens "not to miss seeing Marie Dressler at Schine's Piqua." The gang walked the town on a Saturday preceding the Sunday showing.

That the little stunt helped is borne out by the fact that the Sunday gross on the above picture shattered the house record. Keep up the good work, Cowan, and let's hear from you regularly.

BURNS MADE A DEAL WITH LARGE STORES TO PUBLICIZE FILM

"Champ" contests were effectively used by William T. Burns, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Roslindale, Mass., when exploiting "The Champ."

These were put on among the salesmen and saleswomen in four of the larger stores in his town to determine standing over the period of one week. Similar contests were run at the local bowling alley and the municipal gymnasium. Letters on the picture were also sent out to every organization in town and neighboring communities. These were read at various meetings one week in advance.

The sales contests did the double duty of increasing sales in stores and publicizing the picture. While it is not mentioned that guest tickets or some other means of stimulating interest was used, it is taken for granted that some incentive was offered.

SILVERWATCH BUSY

of the local auto dealers in lieu of advertising value resulting from the stunt. Incidentally, it might be mentioned that live rabbits were offered as an additional incentive for the kids to see the show.

We would also like to show some of the attractive heralds issued for various pictures, Bargain Nights, vacation Weeks, etc., but color combinations will not permit clear reproductions. Suffice then to say that all of them are pleasing to the eye, as to layout, etc., and must have been effective aids in selling the several shows.

DON'T PUT IT OFF ANY LONGER!

WM. H. WRIGHT is located up in Montreal, Canada, where he manages the Monkland Theatre. At this writing his name also is listed on the Club roster as one of the new members and we're mighty glad to have him with us. There are any number of Round Tablers up in your town, Wright, and we're going to ask you to remember us kindly to all of them. Incidentally, what's become of that seasoned showman George Rotsky, an exploiteer de luxe whom we used to know in the old days. Let's hear what you are doing for showbusiness and if you know where Rotsky is, give him a ring and tell him this department would like an article from him on some live topic.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

G. S. GRANGER hails from Tippecanoe City, Ohio, where he stands at the helm of the New Ohio Theatre. He's another manager to send along an application for membership in this ever-increasing army of showmen and a cordial greeting is also extended this new Round Tabler. Now that you've been introduced to the rest of the gang, Granger, do your duty in the matter of regularly sending along some dope on what's taking place in showbusiness in your town.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

NAT MUTNICK is a Warner Brothers man over in Irvington, N. J., where he manages the Castle Theatre. We are happy to announce that Nat has also joined this Club and since the New Jersey boys know a thing or two about selling shows we predict that future contributions are in line for this department from Mutnick. Get the spirit, Nat, and do your bit for your fellow showman.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

H. B. RAM is another owner-manager to become a member of this organization and he hails from the city of Aiken, S. C., where he holds forth at the State Theatre. The South Carolina contingent of this Club has always been well represented in this department, Ram, and we sincerely hope you'll do your part to keep up the good work. Let us hear about that last stunt you pulled that made record attendance at your house. The rest of the gang will be interested.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

C. E. "GENE" YARNELL is one of our old friends who now comes to light as manager of the Ionia Theatre, Ionia, Mich. We haven't had a line on him since he filled the job of manager with several of the big Ziegfeld and White road shows and we're mighty glad to know that he's so happily located on the Butterfield circuit. He is in charge of a new and beautiful theatre in Ionia and while business conditions there are no different than the general situation, he manages to get his share of trade through some tall hustling. Yarnell is the type of man we like to have with us and we extend him hearty greetings as a new Club member. How about a general plan of that Style Show you put over, Gene?

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

ARCHIE MacARTHUR is located out in the Northwest city of Toppenish, Wash., where he is in charge of the Liberty Theatre. He's another new member of the Round Table Club, boys, so step up and give him the glad hand and tell him that you all will be interested to hear what is going on in showbusiness out in his town. Get on the active list, Archie, now that you're one of the gang, and let us know what you are doing to sell shows.

GEORGE BANNAN is one of our hometowners and he's a long way from the old home town—1700 miles to be exact—in the city of Grand Island, Neb., where he manages the Majestic Theatre. George has been in this racket for about four years and used to usher at the Brooklyn, N. Y. Paramount Theatre before he acted as one of the assistants at the New York Rivoli. He was also associated with that well-known showman, Morris Rosenthal, late of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and now holding forth at the Jefferson Theatre, Auburn, N. Y. Bannan's present post is the result of a promotion and with the background of experience he's had there's no reason why he won't keep right on up the ladder. Here's luck to this new Club member, and we hope he continues to keep in touch with headquarters.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

GERALD SCHAFFER is the manager of the Luna Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., and a member of the Fourth Avenue Amusement group, resident-managed by H. Frederickson. He tells us that the Round Table section has been his theatre text book ever since the days he ushered and now we're mighty glad to announce that he's ready to start sending along some of his own contributions to this department. Shoot in your ideas, Gerald, and we'll see that the rest of the gang are tipped off to your methods of selling shows.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

MAC' KRIM is located out in Detroit, Mich., at the Lasky Theatre, and is proposed for membership in this Club by his brother Sol. Good work, Sol, for now we've got 100 per cent Krim representation in your section of the city and we'll be looking for some real results in the way of show-selling ideas. Now that you're one of the gang, Mac', limber up your writing arm and let's have some dope on the latest stunts you've been pulling.

FRANK SCHELLINGER is the assistant manager of the Queen Theatre down in the city of Austin, Texas, and a cordial welcome is extended this new Club member. Texas is chock full of Round Tablers, Frank, and we're mighty glad to add your name to the ever-growing roster. We'll depend upon you to furnish show-selling ideas from your neck of the woods, so don't forget to do your duty as a representative of this showmen's organization.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

RALPH AVERSA is another Canadian to fall in step with this big army of showmen and this new member manages the Hollywood Theatre on the Canadian side of Niagara Falls, Ontario. We're glad to have the opportunity to present Aversa to his host of fellow showmen and trust that he will do his share to keep up the work of this department. Shoot along some of your ideas about show-selling, Ralph, and we'll pass them along to the other boys.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

CLARK WELLS' application for membership in this organization drives another spike in the roster for the Pennsylvania contingent of this ever-increasing army of go-getting showmen. He manages the Rowland Theatre down in Phillipsburg and we're glad to know that he will contribute some of his ideas to this department. Just send the dope along, Clark, and we'll see that it's broadcast all over the world.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

JACK BLINDERMAN hails from Harlem, New York City, where he manages the Harlem-Grand Theatre. His name is a familiar one among Manhattan theatre circles and it's a pleasure to announce that he, too, has become a Round Tabler. Take your seat with the rest of the gang, Jack, and let us know what has been going on up around your interesting neighborhood.

—Wear Your Club Pin! ! !—

ALBERT T. STRETCH, JR., manages the Grange Theatre over in Allentown, N. J., and he's another new member in line for introduction to his fellow showmen in this organization. We note on his letterhead that his name carries the title of Cinematographer and that he has a laboratory in Trenton. Since Albert knows how to handle a camera, we'll be looking for good photos to illustrate whatever he contributes to this department on showmanship.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

HEREWITH COPY OF A NEWS CLIPping from London which is the present-day repetition of the experience of the theatres in the United States during the last World War tax:

London, March 10.—In twelve weeks since the higher entertainments tax has been in effect, the Leeds theatre reports a reduction of 24,210 in attendance and a drop of $2,000 in profits, while the additional tax collected was about $400.

This should be reprinted with comments accentuating the fact that we will again have this experience in America unless Congress sees fit not to tax admissions.—HARRY E. HUFFMAN, Aladdin Theatre Corporation, Denver, Col.

Denounces Brookhart Bill

HAVE JUST NOTICED A LETTER IN MOTION PICTURE HERALD of March 26, under "Voice of the Industry," written by E. L. Parsons, Renville, Minn.

Here is a fellow exhibitor that I want to agree with, and disagree with. The only thing that will cure the ills of this business is for the exhibitors of this great nation to unite in one strong body and put up their own fight. Neither Mr. Brookhart nor any other Congressman can pull us out of a hole with any kind of legislation. Mr. Parsons says "let politics go to hell"; that is what should happen to Mr. Brookhart's bill because it is nothing more than politics.

I am another of the younger generation in this business. I am 30 years old and have been at it for 13 years and I have yet to find any legislation that has helped us. Mr. Brookhart's bill has helped to draw fire to the admission tax, and if this tax is put on us, all we small-town exhibitors can return to the farm and talk to a pair of mugs while we wait for old age to creep on.

There seems to be an exhibitors' organization in this country that has a few high salaried white collars that hold their jobs by stirring up discord. As long as we have to put up with this kind of foolishness, the producers will be the dictators of this industry, but if the exhibitors will discard their petty prejudices and get together, no power in the industry can dictate to us.

If Mr. Brookhart gets his bill through and it becomes a law, we in the "tank" town will pay a price for the pictures that we run that will absolutely be prohibitive, besides the expense that will be incurred when we have to travel a few hundred miles to attend the preview.

Again I say that the exhibitors alone can cure the ills that ail us, and not Congress. The exhibition end of this game has brains in it as well as the producing end. Why can't we use them? Get together and fight for each other instead of fighting among ourselves. Round up these white collared parasites that make their living by stirring up messes and then sucking our life blood while they are supposed to be fighting side by side with us, and add them to the great army of unemployed in this country. All right, Mr. Parsons, let's "let politics go to hell" and get together and accomplish something.—C. H. DEWOLFE, Manager, Palace Theatre, San Saba, Texas.

Answering Mr. Fitton

IN ANSWERING THE MUSIC BACKground subject asked by D. E. Fitton, wish to say as an exhibitor and owner of the Roxie and Masonic theatres, also a professional band leader, I am in a position to answer and explain. Evidently, brother Fitton is not a musician and in fact there are a few people who do not like music at all. Musical background helps in a picture, providing it is boiled down. In certain dialogue sequences, especially sad scenes, it should be brought down almost to a whisper. That is exactly what is the matter with pictures today, not enough music. You have often heard remarks made of this kind. Why is it that pictures don't seem to hold your interest as they did in silent days? It is the touch and feeling that nothing can add to the pictures like music. Let's have more pictures with musical background, but softer, please.—M. C. BULLUCK, Roxie and Masonic theatres, Rocky Mount, N. C.

Hess Wins Important Point In "Churchman" Libel Suit

Gabriel L. Hess, Hays organization attorney, has won a decision in his New York supreme court libel case against the Churchman Company, publishers of The Churchman, which is seen by Hess's attorney, Louis Nizer, as equivalent to a victory. The court struck out five of the seven points in the defense contention. According to Nizer, attorneys for the defense plan an appeal from the ruling of Justice Albert Cohen.

Hess sued the publication for $100,000 damages, after publication of a quotation from Harrison's Reports, which stated that Hess had been indicted for conspiracy in Toronto. Nizer has indicated that the decision of the court leaves only the amount of damages to be decided. Nizer has asked the court for a similar decision in the pending libel suit against Harrison's Reports.

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 123—I shall ask only one question this week because it is one of large importance and one which will take considerable work and energy to answer fully: Presuming your projection lens to have a two-inch free diameter and a 4½-inch working distance, and that you have a plano-convex condenser with 4¾ inches free diameter, what must be the distance of the condenser from the aperture in order to get the entire light beam into the projection lens, and at what point between the light source and projection lens would this entail considerable loss? Assuming or admitting the loss to be considerable at this point, what would be the advantage of getting that light beam into the projection lens? I cordialy invite answers from directors of projection all over the country and all those who consider themselves well versed in projection matters. It will be well to illustrate your answers with a drawing.

Answer to Question No. 117

Bluebook School Question No. 117 was: "(A) Why must the crater of a high intensity arc be much deeper than that of the ordinary arc? (B) Why is it possible to heat high intensity gas to a far higher temperature than it is possible to heat carbon? (C) Of what is high intensity gas composed? (D) Why does the flame of a horizontal arc lean toward the negative carbon at low amperage, but swing back further and further toward the positive as amperage is increased?"

These questions illustrate the fact that this "School" is needed, because it is very evident that only a relatively small proportion of the men are "in the know" in these matters.

What difference does it make, do you ask?

Well, men, some might perhaps say it does not make any, insofar as it has to do with projection work. However, it is highly questionable whether that is true, for the simple reason that in the very nature of things a man can always handle anything he thoroughly understands better and more efficiently than anything on which he lacks such complete knowledge. I don't really believe one of you would question that statement, and if it be true, it then follows that even highly technical knowledge such as this does help.

I have let the following squeeze through on this one, though in some cases it took quite some "squeezing." However, I think it not best to discourage men who work hard, consistently and continuously week in and week out, some of them for months on end, by being too strict. In my opinion no one was 100 per cent perfect on all points, though a few came pretty close. Here are those who made the grade, though with more or less skidding: S. Evans and C. Rau, Lester Borst, G. E. Doe, Roy J. Arntson, George Thompson, T. Van Vaulkenburg, James Devoy, Bill Doe, James Devoy, Larry Tipton, William Broadbent, S. Evans, Tom Wignath, Tom Pearlstein, John Wentworth and Pat O'Brien.

This has been the shortest list we've had in many months, but only a very few of our "regulars" failed to at least make a try at it. I have consulted the two highest authorities I know of and find even their answers to be somewhat at variance. One answers all items in accordance with the ideas and knowledge gleaned through the years by your editor. The other is at wide variance on item (B). I hold the answer I shall set forth to be correct.

(A) By National Carbon Company: "The crater of the high intensity arc must be deeper than that of the ordinary arc, because of the necessity for the formation of a receptacle for the incandescent flame or gas which is the source of light in this particular arc."

(B) By the editor of this department: The light source of an ordinary arc is the crater floor, which of course cannot be heated above the volatization point of carbon, which is approximately 3,500 degrees Centigrade. The reason the flame or gas of the high intensity arc is much higher in temperature (5,300 to 5,500 degrees Centigrade) than the volatization point of carbon is that it is the product of the volatization of rare metals, mostly cerium, contained in the positive carbon, which volatize only at far higher temperature than carbon.

If any authority may wish to take issue with that answer, space will gladly be given for argument. In setting it forth as fact I have the backing of Mr. Bassett of the Sperry Gyroscope Company, who has worked for many years with high intensity and other high power light sources, and should have most excellent knowledge of such matters.

(C) I am puzzled by the various answers to this one. Evans and Rau and Lester Borst have advanced answers which I would not care to dispute without further and extended investigation. Borst says the gas is composed of: "Chiefly vapors set up by the core composition of the positive member (Unquestionably correct thus far. Ed.) which is rich in modified oxygen, which science terms "ozone." Other gases are present in the high intensity gas stream, but only in quite negligible amount."

Evans and Rau say: "High intensity arc gas is composed of hydrofluoric acid gas, which is derived from fluorine, that being the most active of the earth elements and the greatest supporter of combustion."

I think that is all wrong, but have no means of comparing the two elements named, nor time to submit the matter to authorities. Cerium is the chief metallic substance with which the positive core is impregnated and so far as I know Fluorine is quite dissimilar to Cerium.

In explanation let me add that the high intensity arc is still under investigation by engineers, none of whom claim to have come to a full understanding of all its various elements.

National Carbon Company Engineers say: "The gas is composed of some compounds of the rare earth metals, principally cerium, used in the cores of high intensity carbons."

And there you are. That is as far as we seem able to go in that matter at this time.

(D) By Mr. Bassett: "When the current value is low there is a heavy flow of gas in both directions. As the current is increased the flow in one direction becomes gradually stronger and this flow blows or bends the flame toward the positive member."

And there you are. Those many hundreds who have failed on this one may find consolation in the fact that even the engineers are not as yet, as I before said, altogether certain regarding some phases of the high intensity arc action.

BECK BOOSTS RKO's VAUDEVILLE BY SIGNING STARS IN OTHER FIELDS

Grand Opera, Radio and Film Studios Swell Ranks of All Entertainers Under Regime of New Managing Director

Names of the foremost rank in fields as widely variant as grand opera, radio and motion picture studio have swelled the list of entertainers engaged for appearances in Radio-Keith-Orpheum vaudeville in the last two months. The signing of known personalities is the objective of the veteran vaudeville organization under the regime of Martin Beck, and since the reorganization which brought Mr. Beck back to supervision of the vaudeville department of the circuit as managing director, an imposing number of star names has been added.

Mme. Frances Alda, grand opera diva, was obtained for a limited tour this month and Julia Sanderson and Frank Crumit, NBC artists, also have just returned to RKO vaudeville. The return to the Palace of Miss Sanderson and Mr. Crumit brings them back to the stage upon which they made their first joint appearance.

Paul Whiteman and His Orchestra, Kate Smith, Morton Downey, Ben Bernie and His Orchestra, Russ Columbo and others of the radio are featured attractions now appearing on RKO stages.

Others Newly Engaged

Other newcomers include Charles King, Weber & Fields, Ned Wayburn's newest production, Albertina Rasch's new ballet divertissement, Queenie Smith, Jack Haley, Lou Tellegen, Sue Carol and Nick Stuart, Dave Harris, Gloria Foy, George Olsen and His Orchestra, Jack Whiting, Joe Jackson, Trini, Ann Greenway, Joe Laurie, Jr., Puck & White, Roxy Theatre Ensemble, and many others, all of whom are headlining bills throughout the RKO circuit.

Additional encouragement and bookings have been given such known acts as Olsen & Johnson, Doctor Rockwell, Bill Robinson, Ken Murray, Nan Halperin, Rae Samuels, Jay C. Flippen, Weaver Brothers, Dorothy Stone, Singer's Midgets, Gus Van, Bobby May, Hal Sherman, Gus Edwards' Proteges, Raynor Lehr, Galli-Rini and Sister, Peter Higgins, Buster West, Harry J. Conley, Lita Grey Chaplin, Nara Lockford, Dodge Sisters, Toto, Ada Brown, and hundreds of others.

Everything possible is being done to encourage young artists and to develop new material, and RKO executives see a greater vaudeville era in the offing.

BERNIE COWHAM

One of the most popular organists in the country is this chap, Bernie Cowham. He has been featured in fewer theatres than nearly any other organist, in the time he has been in this business, and that attests his popularity more markedly than would changes to many theatres.

Bernie recently celebrated his third anniversary in New York City at the RKO Flushing theatre, and his fourth consecutive year here has started out better than his first. The inhabitants of this community have given him the title of "Flushing's Adopted Son." What more can be said for his popularity?

Jimmy Durante on Stage

Jimmy Durante left the Coast MGM studio last week for a series of personal appearances in Eastern houses. His first stop will be in Pittsburgh.

Paramount Repeats Stage Show

The Paramount in New York has decided to show the stage attraction featuring George Jessel, Bing Crosby, Lillian Roth and Burns and Allen in a return engagement on April 8. Attendance records were broken when the group played the house during the week of March 25. Insistent demand from patrons while the act played the Brooklyn Paramount last week resulted in the return engagement.

Edwin Burke in New York

Edwin Burke of the Fox Coast studio staff, is in New York reviewing plays.

Agents Bidding for Player Time

Theatrical agents in Hollywood are understood to be feverishly active in attempting to book screen players for personal stage appearances, as a result of the time open through the 12-week "lay-off" clause in the standard form contract for screen players.

Agents are said to be outbidding each other with large offers, while the players are reported ready to take under consideration any and all offers. The booking of advance personal appearances is difficult because of the uncertainty concerning the time of the "lay-off" in individual cases. Many producers are in the habit of splitting the time into divisions, sometimes only a week or two at one time.

Major Bowes Back on the Air

After convalescing for six weeks in Florida, Major Edward Bowes, managing director of the New York Capitol theatre, and genial "Father" of the world-renowned Capitol "Family" of radio fame, will return to the air waves Sunday morning, April 10. Major Bowes, who has been absent from the "Family" broadcasts since December 6, owing to illness, has been a weekly feature on the NBC chain since July 25, 1925, nearly seven years, and this has been the first time in all these years that he has not broadcast every week. A gala program has been arranged for his return.

Organist "Shoots" Herself With Toy Pistol in Accident

Miss Louise M. Roesch, wellknown New York organist, while playing with an inch and a half toy pistol, accidentally pulled the trigger and bruised one of her fingers. At first the injury appeared trivial, but infection developed and an operation was necessitated. The physician said, however, that the injury would not interfere with her duties as organist.

Toronto Houses Experiment With Stage Musical Shows

A dozen suburban theatres in Toronto have been used for an experiment with vaudeville and musical acts during the past week with a view to the immediate adoption of abbreviated stage shows on circuits of the Famous Players group.

Jack Arthur has returned to the orchestra pit at the Imperial theatre, Toronto, for de luxe performances. Horace Lapp is relieving Arthur for other shows.

STAGE SHOWS

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending March 24

Fanchon and Marco's "Limehouse Nights" Idea opens with an exterior depicting sailors and others walking along a "lowdown" street. The scene shifts to the interior of one of the dives with the mixed chorus attired in gray costumes representative of the gay '90s.

The thread of a plot runs through the Idea with Don Carroll in the role of a gob and the feminine member of Armando and Lita, dancers, providing the romantic note. In the opening Idea he sings "Limehouse Blues" and presents her with a bit of jewelry, asking her to meet him later.

The audience is entertained by the Wing Wah troupe, a quintet of Japanese contortionists and plate jugglers whose twists and bends know no end.

The chorus for its next number is divided into couples each representing a nation and presenting some form of snappy dance. Scotland, Italy, Germany and America are all represented in this dance episode with costumes to match.

Val and Ernie Stanton keep up running chatter replete with a diversity of wisecracks and jokes. Their comedy methods are brisk and somewhat different, clicking nicely with the audience.

The chorus in their next number are attired in red bellhop uniforms and do a dance routine tap dancing from and climbing over and around chairs. They give way to Armando and Lita, whose dance represents a struggle between the girl, who strives to leave the place, and her partner in the role of an Oriental, who seeks to stop her and steal the jewel. The ending is tragic with Don Carroll returning to sing "Limehouse Blues" over his slain sweetheart. The orchestra, under the direction of Glenn Welty, plays from the pit during the Idea.

Salt Lake Orpheum

Week ending March 30

The stage performance opens with the contribution of Charles Ahearn and his varied assortment of assistants in a burlesque offering, which adds considerably to the merriment of the bill. Billy Farrell and his Dad, a kid of 73, who is as agile a stepper as his son, earn their share of applause, while Helen Yorke and Virginia Johnson, possessing both pulchritude and pleasing voices, add a touch of the artistic. The dexterous Van Cello, billed as the man with "educated feet," offers stunts in proof of the term and his tricks prove to be highly amusing.

The picture offering features "Girl Crazy."

San Francisco Warfield

Week ending March 30

This week's stage show at the Warfield is the smoothest running of any since Hermie King assumed duties as master of ceremonies and leader of the Warfield Joy Gang. The offering is of the vaudeville type, with several members of the band starring with specialties. Several encores were necessary at the opening show.

The curtain rises with the band on the stage playing hits made famous by Maurice Chevalier, with Charley Carter, Chevalier impersonator and "Happy-Go-Lucky" radio star, singing "Louise" and "What Would You Do?" Hermie King plays a piano solo and rotund George Wendt performs on the cornet.

Muriel Gardner does a spectacular dance and demonstrates that she is as much at home on her hands as on her feet. Jack Warren, in glorified cowboy attire, shows that he knows his ropes, dancing and whirling a lasso at the same time. Sammy Carr, of the band, plays the "Second Hungarian Rhapsody" on the banjo and as an encore offers two popular airs played at the same time.

The band plays "Minnie the Moocher" as a hot number and it fairly smokes. Anthony and Rogers, who look like two Irishmen, offer an Italian number that gets a continuous barrage of laughs. The show ends with Three Jacks and a Queen offering an adagio which proves a work of art.

The screen attraction is "Dancers in the Dark" and this fits in well with the stage show.

Dallas Palace

Week ending March 24

Materially aided by the return of the popular organist Harold Ramsey, as the guest conductor of the Modern Rhythm Band, this orchestra more than does its share to develop a satisfactory enthusiasm to put over the Fanchon and Marco "Hacienda" program. The stage show was under the capable guidance of the charming blonde Adriana, a Mexican mistress of ceremonies who made her announcements in Spanish, and is a singer, dancer, guitarist. Her personal accomplishments were more enjoyed than those of her cohorts. Sue Russell burlesqued opera and the ballet while Hinky and Dinky, a Mutt and Jeff pair, aided along the same line but exceeded their time limit with their offering as it palled. Doyle and Donnelly were another pair of vaudeville comedians with little new to offer. The Five Gems, a quintet of Indian club jugglers, appeared in silver wigs and disported themselves in a fast, clever act, and they retained their feminine identity till the last, though we suspected otherwise. The Six Gordonians gave a swell trampoline and tumbling act to close out a weak show.

San Antonio Sadler's

Half week ending March 26

Harley Sadler and Billie Sadler were on for the first number, each singing and talking to the tune of "Money Is Your Best Friend."

Ruton's Educated Alley Dogs, five smart canines of the collie and terrier type, went through some fast balancing and walking on their hind feet, jumping over hoops and pushing baskets, and even dashing through burning fire rings.

The third act brought out a newcomer in Neil Hall, Texas youth, who did some fancy tap dancing. After two bows he did an encore. Neal should soon be a "big timer."

Little Billy Mack, a local tapster, clogged and hoofed in perfect rhythm.

Last on the program were Miss Ethel Snow and Barte Couch singing a duet accompanied by an accordian and xylophone.

CHICAGO

While in Chicago, Kate Smith once again proved to be the Good Samaritan. After having performed for 1,400 patients at the Hines Veteran's Hospital, she found herself late for her vaudeville engagement. Just as she was about to dash for the theatre, she remembered an assignment she had promised to carry out. A New York youngster had written to the "Songbird of the South" asking her to pay a visit to his father, one of the soldiers. Although she already was well behind in her schedule, she kept her word and called on the veteran. . . .

Florenz Ziegfeld is turning his talents to radio on a new series of weekly programs to be known as "Ziegfeld Follies of the Air," heard for the first time over a nationwide Columbia network, Sunday, April 3rd. Ziegfeld, whose outstanding successes include twenty-three editions of the "Ziegfeld Follies," "Whoopee," Kid Boots" and many other wonderful shows, will appear on each of the weekly programs to lead before the microphone an endless chain of stars of past and present Ziegfeld productions in one revue after another. . . .

Billy Jones, who appears in the radio sketch with Ernie Hare over the NBC network, was a bank clerk, sheepherder, miner, telephone repair man and a blacksmith before he decided to give his voice a try on the stage. . . .

Did you know that Jane Froman is upset unless allowed to sing on the left side of the microphone with her arms resting on a music rack; that Josef Koestner, NBC conductor, invariably memorizes the entire score of his concert before each broadcast; that Lee Sims has one of the largest private collections of records in the country and spends a great deal of his time playing and replaying them.

Why is it that many of the famous orchestra leaders of today started in orchestral groups playing violin? This does not always show up immediately for many of the batoners do not stick to their first love. In the case of Paul Whiteman it did not appear until Paul spied such an instrument one day and picked it up to play . . . then answered friendly critics with the remark that it was his old instrument. So it is with Don Pedro. Recently it was found Don stole away to play his violin when he could. A real troubadour naturally would be expected to play a guitar, and Don does that for his audience . . . but he is torn between two loves—guitar and violin—when he is alone. Listen to Don's violin some time when he is playing over KYW and note how it stands clear of the other instruments with its pure, well modulated tones.

ORGAN SOLOS

EARL ABEL (San Antonio Majestic) offered as his first organ solo at this huge film house a group of up to date song hits which he presented in a very well liked manner. Earl started off his musical rendition with a clever parody on the circuit march, "The Voice of the RKO." After a brief chat with the audience about being back in the Alamo City once more, Abel continued with a beautiful selection entitled "Home," then "Sleepy Time Down South" and "Was That the Human Thing To Do?" For a novelty he did a special arrangement to the tune of "Carolina Moon," and "Now's the Time to Fall in Love," which brought him big applause.

JULIA DAWN (San Antonio Aztec) offered in organ recital "Two Heart Beats in ¾ Time," "Kiss Me Again," "Minute Waltz," "Merry Widow Waltz," and "Save the Last Dance for Me." Miss Dawn also did a few vocal choruses on some of the numbers which blended in nicely with her own accompanying. Julia is going over great at this house.

ROBERT G. CLARKE (Detroit Hollywood) played before Easter bunny slides, opening with an Easter lyric on "Hallelujah." Scattered voices picked up "You're My Everything," which was followed by a transition lyric to "Babbling Brook." Heartier response was given to "Alice Blue Gown," with an Easter clothes lyric. "Kiss by Kiss" and "Snuggled On Your Shoulder" brought out most of the shy voices. "All of Me" reminded others that a local boy made good in its composition. "Happy Days" was parodied to become "Easter Day Is Here Again." Clarke has been better. He appeared to drag and overemphasize tempo.

MILTON CHARLES (Philadelphia Mastbaum) played and sang "Rain on the Roof," with a spot simulating rain pouring over the console and the organist and a realistic musical effect of rain and wind. He also gave a clever satirical impression of Ben Bernie in one of his radio talks.

HERBIE (New Orleans Publix Saenger) offered a very clever series of parodies and laughs in his "Easter Greetings" solo, which was practically the only novelty act in town which acknowledged the Easter bunny had come to town. He opened with a crazy parody on "You're My Everything," went into an egg chorus (all the lines starting with the egg sound) to the tune of "Faded Summer Love," had a style parody on "All of Me" that brought out the laughs, and closed with a parody of "Just Friends." Whether this was a gentle announcement of his impending departure, he did not say, but the organ solo was one of the cleverest he had presented since the election idea.

JACK MARTIN (Milwaukee Wisconsin) offers "Music of Moonlight" as his organ solo. Selections include "By the Light of the Silvery Moon," "Moonlight Saving Time," "Pale Moon" and "I Thank Mr. Moon." A violinist accompanies the organ to "Pale Moon" and the last selection is sung from the stage, while the words to all songs are flashed on the screen.

OVERTURES

JOHN GART (Brooklyn Gates) and His Rhythm Boys opened here with a specially arranged and prepared overture which assisted greatly in introducing this aggregation to the patrons of this house. Gart conducted his 10 musicians in his own special arrangements of popular tunes, proving to the audience that he and his orchestra are not only good musicians but entertainers as well. Their versatility was shown in their singing and solo work, which made a very good impression on the patrons. Gart himself earned a great hand for his playing of a special arrangement of the well known "Nola." Gart and his boys should have no difficulty making good here.

GLENN WELTY (Milwaukee Wisconsin) and his Wisconsin theatre orchestra offer "Victor Herbert Melodies." Featured in connection with the overture is Dorothy Jubelier, who sings "Kiss Me Again." A quartet also sings several of the Herbert melodies. The overture received a rousing reception.

EDDIE SEE (San Antonio Sadler's) recently gave the patrons of this tent theatre a real treat in "I Got Rhythm," and "Pop Goes the Weasel," with each member of the orchestra doing a specialty turn that made the natives laugh out loud. Next was a saxophone and xylophone duet, giving the folk something rare in "The World is Always Waiting for the Sunrise." Eddie See also did another of his pleasing cornet and violin solos with Ethel Snow doing a neat song number.

FRED SCHMITT and his Denver (Denver) Grande orchestra did themselves proud the past week with their "Sousa overture." the orchestra members were dressed as a military band and the drums and brasses predominated in the brass band effect. Selections included "Semper Fideles," "Spirit of Liberty," "Invincible Eagle," "Hands Across the Sea," "Stars and Stripes Forever" and Sousa's last composition, "Golden Jubilee." For the finale the curtains parted and a tableau was presented showing a huge portrait of the late band leader and four girl trumpeteers paying silent tribute.

KARL LAMBERTZ (Dallas RKO Majestic) and his orchestra presented "Girl Crazy" as the title to their overture, in which they paid tribute to the next week's picture of the same title. So whether it is of feminine foibles or fortes we hear "Who's Your Whoozis" rolled out in syncopation, then the presence of "Dinah" is made known with Mr. Holick as a soloist on his slide trombone. Carrying on the parade of femininity in title in this popular sequence of musical hits, "Nola" is enjoyed with Mr. Heim in a piano solo. And the rollicking tune of "I've Got Rhythm" sways us to the final "What's Become of Sallie" with Tommy Carmody, whose vocal intonations and meaningful gestures complete an enjoyable musical fare.

FREDDY MACK (Brooklyn Fox) and His Joy Gang this week presented an entertaining overture entitled "Gettin' Hot." Special arrangements of a number of "hot" tunes were played and a vocal solo by Mack of "Get Ready for Love" was featured.

This young good-looking chap has a snappy way about him and a smile that has won him a host of friends in the short time he has been at this house. He is one of the top-notchers in this new vogue of personable, versatile showmen music directors.

EDGAR W. HUNT (Baltimore Keith's) took full charge of the orchestra reduced to fifteen men with Joe Candullo, formerly director and master of ceremonies, out. He presented selections from "The Band Wagon," directing his Keithonians and having the members rise at the finale for a bow. The entire overture was presented without innovations, either of moaning saxes or wailing trumpets, and patrons appear to like the dignified old theatrical style very much for a change.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

WHAT DOES YOUR PUBLIC KNOW ABOUT RAW FILM?

NOTHING, perhaps. Yet, whether they're aware of it or not, people are profoundly influenced by the photographic quality which that film gives or does not give them on the screen. It may mean all the difference between a picture that goes its quiet, unprofitable way and one that becomes the talk of the town.

There's no need, these days, to run the risk of sacrificing photographic quality. Eastman Gray-backed Super-sensitive Negative, with its unmatched qualities and its never-failing uniformity, costs no more than other films, yet it helps substantially to head the picture for success. Wise the cameraman who uses it...lucky the exhibitor who runs prints made from it!

George W. Sweeney

We of the Bowman-Biltmore Hotels have found it pays to provide the best for our guests. It pays to provide the best of food and accommodations . . . a bath with every room . . . and superb service in every particular.

It pays to furnish rooms and public spaces attractively, comfortably . . . to use carpets, for instance, that are restful under foot, that deaden sound, that are beautiful to look at. And we know from long experience that carpets by the Bigelow Weavers check-up on all three counts.

Such things help to bring the same people back again and again to the Commodore and other hotels under Bowman-Biltmore management. They say Bowman-Biltmore Hotels do things right . . . and the 355,000 people who were our guests last year can't be wrong!

Lively Wool — the Bigelow Weavers' blends of extra sturdy wools — means worthwhile savings in hard cash for you.

Lively Wool resists wear and tear — you don't have to renew carpets by the Bigelow Weavers so often. It is easier to clean — that means a saving in maintenance. It keeps its beauty longer, is softer to walk on, deadens noises — that means satisfied patrons who will come back again.

Those are the reasons why Bowman-Biltmore Hotels keep coming back to the Bigelow Weavers for more carpets made of Lively Wool. You'll find Bigelows in 90% of the class A hotels in the country and in leading theatres. Lively Wool must be right!

Theatres Require a Special Kind of Carpeting

To be beautiful when new is one thing. To retain its beauty through years of the severe wear that theatre patronage gives it, a carpeting must be specially woven to meet these conditions. Its wools must be extra strong, extra tough, super-elastic. Its weave must be close . . . tight . . . firm. The dyes must be absolutely colorfast.

Mohawk makes this kind of carpeting—specially constructed for theatre use. Mohawk's carpet specialists can show you a variety of weaves, grades, designs and colors and help you select the right carpet for your theatre—with the utmost economy.

A message to the # Motion Picture Theatre Owners

of America

A most important announcement was delivered at the Allied States Convention in Detroit, and the M. P. T. O. A Convention in Washington by the Photophone Division of the RCA Victor Company.

It was at the same time the most important announcement exhibitors have heard since sound became the screen's most dominating factor.

Cut to the bone and right down to the solid facts, it is herewith transmitted to motion picture theatre owners of America, large and small, from the largest circuit to the individual exhibitor.

Before one or the other contemplates the installation or replacement of sound reproducing equipment, investigation of the following information is respectfully suggested:

The Photophone Division of the RCA Victor Company announces

The introduction of two new all AC operated sound reproducing equipments, the Standard Super, designed for theatres from 2,500 to 4,000 seating capacity at $5,000 and Standard Large, for theatres between 1,400 and 2,500 seating capacity at $3,750.

Reduction in the price of the Special Size equipment from $1,600 to $1,450.

Other material reductions including contract service charges, all made possible by the recent merger of the RCA Photophone Co. with RCA Victor Co., Inc. Increases in capacity limitations of all A C operated Special Size equipment from 500 to 600 seats and all A C operated Standard Small Size equipment from 1,200 to 1,400 seats.

NOTES on WRITERS and SUBJECTS in this ISSUE

¶ There are those who would be unkind enough to say that in this issue, the first Buyers Number of 1932, we urge keeping the theatre in high-class condition because this means buying equipment, furnishings and supplies, and that this means business for advertisers. And such unkind persons would be right. One can call that admission refreshing frankness, if one likes. But we can make it because it represents only the incidental one of two motives. After all, advertisers in this field need theatres to sell to. Therefore, our interest in them is logically less than it is in the renewed or continued prosperity of theatres. The permanence and growth of theatres, if you will. And there is no denying that present economic conditions have in many instances brought about such curtailment of expenditures that motion picture theatre appeal is threatened. Prominent exhibitors have referred to it, deploring it as a fact. And it is important to BETTER THEATRES because it is important to exhibitors.... The subject requires no "asides" here. Practically every vital point of view is offered under the title Keeping the Theatre Fit to Prosper. So that the exhibitor and manager may know with greatest convenience whose thoughts and experience are offered, each contributor is identified above his article. There is something for those who could use suggestions regarding actual procedure. But if no more were offered than stimulating ideas, these articles would be deeply practical. These are no times for the easier course of "watchful waiting." Stimulation is needed. For through every adversity—if the motion picture is to maintain its high place—"the show must go on."

¶ It was hardly expected that the radical innovation brought forward last year by Ben Schlanger, New York architect, would find practical application so soon. Ultimately, of course, for the theory was very convincing. But the reversed floor slope would make patrons go up-hill! And they had been going downhill so long! Such a turn-about-face is not to be forced upon the public without courage and forethought, and when a sizeable investment is involved, courage is likely to be less than the forethought. The Thalia theatre (The Reversed Floor Slope in Practice) is so close to this desk that we have been able to appreciate its interest to both exhibitors and designers since its inception. Its significance as the first theatre to employ the Schlanger principle is not to be shadowed by other features. High among these others we would place its immediate location. Here, too, is an idea! For the Thalia is located beneath another theatre, in the sublevel of the same building. Yet few patrons will realize either that there is such proximity between the two theatres, or that the Thalia is really in a basement level at all! Local conditions influence this, of course. Ninety-fifth Street slopes off abruptly from Broadway, on which the upper theatre faces. The Thalia entrance is on 95th Street, and the street incline allows the entrance to be on the street level with only a slight descent into the theatre proper. This descent, moreover, is worked out on such a gradual scale that it is scarcely noticeable. . . . It is doubtful, indeed, if the Thalia could have been built with such admirable characteristics of design had the seating floor been given the usual slope toward the screen. Obviously, the floor would have had to be carried more deeply downward, while the rear of the auditorium would have lost headroom where it is needed most. This influence of the reversed floor may or may not be less important in most applications, but the fact remains that it is the rear of the auditorium that needs the most height, without, however, forcing normal horizontal sightlines into a vacant and meaningless area.... The design of the Thalia, however, is told elsewhere. What is not told there is that the readiness of practical exhibitors (the operator of the Thalia has over 30 houses in New York City) to support financially the application of new ideas in theatre design, is most encouraging. Many of those ideas, though theoretically convincing, prove fallacious. A few, however, come to represent true advancement. No ideas are little better than the former, while from the latter progress is born.

¶ The contribution from C. M. Cutler (Lighting Your Lobby to Make It Sell) is in direct response to a number of inquiries from managers and exploitation men. Realizing the lobby is the theatre's store-window, they also have appreciated that old methods of merely putting up a number of display frames does not coincide with modern salesmanship and equipment. Mr. Cutler is eminently able to discuss any technical problems concerning display lighting, having for years been a member of the research engineering staff of the General Electric Company at Nela Park, Cleveland. More than that, however, he has interested himself considerably in theatre lighting (which offers so many opportunities in lighting technique), and has, indeed, contributed to BETTER THEATRES before on this subject.

¶ The symposium on seating problems (Modern Seating and Chair Maintenance) is continued in this issue with a contribution from the same engineer who wrote for it in the March 12th issue. A. C. Hoven is a mechanical engineer on the research staff of the American Seating Company at Grand Rapids, Mich. Another authority on seating will contribute to the series in the next issue of BETTER THEATRES.

¶ One of the leading authorities on acoustics is introduced to readers of BETTER THEATRES with Transient Distortion Introduced by Horn Type Speakers. Vesper A. Schlenker is a New York consulting acoustics engineer. He was formerly with the Bell Laboratories, where he attained groundwork for his present studies. He has been doing considerable sound test work for Radio-Keith-Orpheum.

¶ Leo T. Parker (Decisions in Theatre Cases) is a regular contributor on legal subjects to BETTER THEATRES. He is a Cincinnati attorney.

What your ERPI SERVICE dollar buys . . . . . .

These facts show how each ERPI Service dollar protects the exhibitor

I 54.1% for the inspection service that prevents trouble — rendered by 600 men traveling 5,720,000 miles a year — to maintain highest standard of tonal quality.

II 13% for emergency and appointment calls which would be greater except for the preventive inspection service.

III 13% for maintenance of 35 branch offices, 173 other service points and $750,000 stock of spare parts which make possible immediate emergency repairs, quick replacements.

IV 4.6% for replacements, repairs and improvements made at ERPI cost and for maintenance of Bureau which reduced repair costs 46% in 1931—saving exhibitors over $750,000!

V 4.3% for general administration and engineering which make possible efficient nation-wide service and uniform quality operation.

VI 11% for protection against fire loss — assuring complete replacement immediately without cost to exhibitor.

5 years of ERPI SERVICE experience made this economic dollar division possible

Experience with more than 8000 theatres proved to us that further reducing the number of preventive calls means increased emergency and appointment calls! ℭ To reduce branch points and stocks would endanger maintenance of service—which would prove costly to the exhibitor. ℭ ERPI's protection against fire loss by immediate replacement without loss of time is an economy of ERPI service. ℭ All economies made possible by five years of developing the present efficiency of ERPI Service have been reflected in repeated and voluntary adjustments of the service charge.

These ERPI economies have resulted in savings of more than $7,000,000 yearly to exhibitors—without impairing quality and performance.

LOOKING TOWARD A THEATRE FOR THE MOTION PICTURE

an editorial

THE decision of Roxy and his Radio-Keith-Orpheum confreres, to give the motion picture a chance to prove itself as a form of entertainment capable of standing on its own legs, is encouraging to those who regard the cinema as this advanced age's authentic successor to older—and simpler—forms of theatrical amusement.

The Rockefeller Center motion picture theatre will hold use of its stage facilities in abeyance, it is decided. Only screen entertainment will be presented. If its world, living merely by virtue of manipulated light, can compete successfully with the reality of the other Rockefeller Center theatres, the motion picture will continue to have a monumental home in that impressive venture. If not, Roxy threatens to bring on the girls and others three-dimensional.

In a sense, the decision is quite a tribute to the motion picture as it has finally, and rather swiftly, developed. Most of all, however, it is a challenge. Whatever Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., expect from their "City," we feel pretty sure that the Voice of the RKO will be consistently raised in demand of at least moderate profits. Strange if it were otherwise. And thus the decision to give the motion picture a tentative autonomy seems to us to be much the same as saying to it, "Well, here's your chance. You've been parading yourself lately as the peer and superior of your fellow arts, and it is true that you've come to reveal considerable talent. Certainly you are a popular sort of fellow. But are your friends merely impressed by your swell clothes and generosity? Or will they stick with you because you mean to them things deeply satisfying which only a few of the others mean, and because they can enjoy your company more readily than that of any? Let us see! And remember that money talks."

The screen needs not Rockefeller City's affluence to determine its destiny. It merely has happened (except in Hollywoodized Los Angeles) that other enterprises, existing within the film industry itself, have been noticeably unwilling to attempt the same faith. True, RKO is of this industry. But more than any other member of it, RKO is financially interested in the success of three-dimensional entertainment. And precisely like the others, RKO is primarily interested in profits, whatever be the legitimate method of attaining them.

At its Rockefeller City theatre, the motion picture has a chance to be impressively successful as a great entertainment art. Failure there might easily influence its destiny, at least for a long time. Such determination of its true field, of course, could prove desirable, regardless of its character. After all, one can not build substantially on error. Perhaps with all its intrinsic genius, its sound and the color to come, it is not essentially—objectively—so very much above the nickel and dime that nurtured it. Many have expressed doubt that the recent tendency to Broadwayize the cinema has been in accordance with its true talents. We ought to know so that we can order our plans rationally, and maybe Mr. Rothafel and his confreres are now to help us find out.

If the film makes good in the "big way" represented by this opportunity, an architectural dilemma is also likely to be solved, and the solution could only react to the improvement of screen entertainment as the public receives it. That is to say, we might in consequence consider the motion picture worthy of its own special kind of theatre.

Even the architects of Rockefeller City have admitted that they didn't know which they were building for the most, the screen or the stage. Otherwise, of course, one might have expected that a project so aspiring as this one, might give birth to something like an ideal motion picture theatre. Innovations still on the fire may yet give Theatre No. 8 important technical distinction. The fact remains, however, that its architects were inhibited by the same restrictions that many an original, well equipped architect has encountered with the result that, perforce or not, he still thinks of the motion picture theatre essentially in the terms of the building in which our fathers saw "East Lynne."

Even if Mr. Rothafel (aided by the accounting department) discovers that with a screen the stage yet "is the thing," that may only tend to throw the whole destiny of the cinema toward the small low-admission type of theatre. This emphatically is no attempt at prophecy. We merely wish to point out that just during the last year or two, interest in this type of cinema has contributed appreciably to the technical advancement of motion picture theatre design. If it proves to be the better commercial medium of film exhibition, further advancement might well be accelerated. Maybe in any event, the motion picture is to attain its own theatre, a building as delicately adapted to it as its own vital projectors.

MR. M. P. THEATRE: Do your stuff, boys. If the worst is yet to come, I'll need everything!

JUDICIOUS SELECTION

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

Editor of Better Theatres

TO BE OR NOT to be. I suppose those words were born immortal because they had already long expressed a common issue, and because they always would. Most of us have been confronted by Hamlet's question at one time or another, with our destiny dependent to varying extents upon the decision we make. It is a question most recurrent at times like these.

Show business has an answer for it characteristic of its buoyant disciples. "The show must go on!" they say. But must it? Is its continuance desired or possible? That is the question, and some definite answer seems to me generally imperative, because uncertainty in time disturbs established business methods, corrupts the spirit of management and invites the worms of neglect in upon the property.

The business that is to endure must, it seems quite plain, be conducted as if it were meant to endure. The decision as to whether it is to be or not to be, is determined to a high degree by the ability or willingness of the proprietor to conduct it on that basis. He will endeavor to adjust his overhead to any decrease in his volume of business, but he will not seek a minimum overhead that jeopardizes the efficient and effective functioning of his enterprise.

A Symposium offering Timely Informed Thought on Maintenance, Rehabilitation—and Show Business

These truths are self-evident, yet at times of business recession one notes a tendency to forget or ignore them. Reaction to changed conditions is immediate and often ill advised, and when those conditions are prolonged, managements not only may attempt further retrenchment, but may ignore, inadvertently or deliberately, the depreciation of their properties, which, indeed, may have been accelerated by their very policy of extreme continued economy.

A business man in a non-amusement field told me not long ago that one of the major problems of his company was how to maintain dealers' stores and stocks. The manufacturer could not do it for the dealer. The dealer himself had to be convinced that he was the loser when his stock was not attractively merchandised and when it was not kept complete. Similar observations were recently reported to his stockholders by the head of a large carpet concern. In such instances, it is a strong temptation for the manufacturer to withdraw dealer rights from such retailers and turn them over to those less timid.

THE MERCHANDISING of motion pictures is peculiarly dependent upon aggressiveness. It has to be especially alive to buyer interests of the moment, and in no other business, perhaps, is display so important. Only shrewd and timely booking can here meet stock requirements. Only vigilant inspection and adequate maintenance and replacement can produce continued sales. A characteristic of the theatre basically distinguishing it from most other retail establishments is that its goods are consumed within it, immediately, and through a process in which the "store" itself functions as a complex mechanism. Its goods are never more than potentially satisfactory in themselves. It is the manner of their delivery which determines their ultimate merit. Film is just so many feet of celluloid in a can. It is made into a motion picture entertainment only by the many instruments of the theatre, properly coordinated and working efficiently.

These instruments may be grouped into three major classes—(a) display, (b) environment, and (c) reproduction. The first seeks to create an immediate desire in the public for the emotional stimulus peculiar to the dramatic arts, doing this by emphasizing the character of a specific production in association with the charm of the theatre itself. The second group of theatrical devices attempts to effect in the customer a somewhat exalted sense of well-being derived from perfect comfort in surroundings beautiful, luxurious, harmonious. The third class completes the process of making a motion picture, complementing the technics of the studio to realize at last the finished product.

To call one class more important than the other would be to invite a weakening of the theatrical function as a whole. There are elements to be stressed, of course, most of these lying within the province of reproduction (projection, sound, acoustics, screen, etc.). However, one must be wary of emphasis that obscures, of concentration that leads to neglect, for the public is not affected by some factors all of the time, but by all factors at least some of the time. Each of the three classes of theatrical instruments named are vitally united to form the whole theatrical enterprise, and any necessity for economy is not being met according to sound business principles if any class contributes less than it should.

THE ONLY method that a policy of economy may wisely dictate is that of judicious selection. Inspection should be made of every division of the theatre, each item of equipment and furnishings being carefully examined for its condition and present bearing on the appearance or efficiency of that division of the theatre. This will disclose not only what items need repair or replacement, but the effect of each fault on the function of the theatre as a whole, and even if strict economy seems imperative, effective maintenance can be pursued by selecting for repair or replacement those items which have been found to exercise the greatest negative influence. Other items, though faulty, may be wisely denied correction until financial stringency relaxes. In one theatre they will be certain things, in another theatre, other things. To postpone their repair or replacement does not constitute neglect if the management knows their condition and the significance thereof to his business. The rest of the equipment, furnishings and accessories do not permit of any such postponement, and they should be selected for immediate attention. There is no other sound business way.

Accompanying this and associated discussions are check-lists of equipment, furnishings and accessories arranged for convenience according to divisions of the theatre. They lend themselves also, and with some added significance, to classification under the functional dihisions.

Considering display, we should want to examine such items as the marquee frame, sign, lamps, color hoods, flashers, letters, poster frames, bulletin boards, exterior cleanliness, etc.—not forgetting that since the theatre itself is a setting for the dramatic attraction and also has a charm of its own to sell, much that contributes to sheer environment is usually found also to have display value.

Among the environmental factors can be named such items as plaster work, painting, chandeliers, bracket fixtures, decorative metal work, brass rails, artificial flowers, floor coverings, draperies, fountains, furniture, mirrors, cove and similar illuminative devices of decorative as well as utilitarian character, organ grilles, organ console, perfumers, chairs, air conditioning facilities, stage curtains, and so on.

It is not within my particular province to go into detail regarding specific methods of inspection, repair and replacement, but it may not be amiss to digress a little from my precise theme to emphasize the fundamental importance of chairs to the success of the show. Perhaps it is unnecessary to insist upon this emphasis here. But if it is unnecessary, then many a theatre is being flagrantly neglected in this respect. It seems that seating was not always what it should have been even in the boom times. Now one notes an increase in the number of chairs that are noticeably uncomfortable or annoying. The seats have lost their original tilt, causing one to feel as though he is constantly in danger of sliding to the floor and as if he should brace himself on the standards of the seat in front. Or the seats won't come up, or they won't go down. And backs are loose. These are the more extreme cases, but in others lesser faults have immense negative influence on the patron. They indicate something, and that something is in reference to the management. They color the patron's thoughts regarding the theatre as a whole, and if too frequently encountered, they belittle the motion picture as entertainment. I am speaking of the public now, and no exhibitor need be told what a touchy, sensitive, altogether temperamental animal Mr. John Public is today. The faulty chair—the shifty, or creaky, or stubborn, the sliding, in short, the uncomfortable theatre chair—gives him a pain where and when he sits while trying to lose himself in sensations less of his everyday world.

It is in the chair, indeed, that the effect of environment upon the patron's reaction to the technics of the theatre is most direct. Here certainly no accessible dollar should be spared to assure conditions approaching perfection.

Reproduction endows everything concerning projection (both image and sound) and acoustics with an importance that permits of little, if any, slighting. In addition there are such important items as the screen, screen borders, dimmer control systems, stage lighting, spots and effect machines, curtain control devices, organ and orchestra lifts, scenery and many others, not to mention still more which are of minor importance but which still play a part in the whole process of "putting on the show."

Necessity makes its own compromises. What to leave out and what to include in any single instance can usually be determined without sacrificing too much of what is desired. It can not be done at random, however—in ignorance of the true conditions. First, planned inspection. Then judicious selection. And then—if the show is to go on, not only for the present, but in future—adequate correction of those elements which weaken the aggregate effectiveness of the theatre in its mission to the public.

CHECKING PROJECTION

By HERBERT GRIFFEN

Engineer, International Projector Corporation

AT THE COMING meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, to be held in Washington, May 9-12, unusual attention will be given to the practical projection problems of the motion picture theatre. I have been a member of the society for 15 years, and at no time during all that period has it taken up so seriously the practical problems of this field. This has not been due to indifference, but was largely the result of the industry's failure to realize more fully that technical conditions play an important part in the showing of motion pictures. Motion pictures are entirely the result of illusion, and technical defects greatly reduce the entertainment value of the performance. If the entertainment value is reduced, the patron is less likely to return when in need of relaxation, and the influence of this eventually shows itself in reduced box-office receipts. Somebody said many years ago, "To get them in the first time is easy. To get them out is easy. It is getting them back again that is not so easy." The theatre owner or manager, therefore, will do well to consider seriously the importance of presenting the picture in the best possible way from a technical standpoint.

The theatre executive has little or no influence over the production of motion pictures, but he has almost complete control over their presentation. Yet, strange to say, in many instances he is not informed about this side of his responsibilities. It is a mistake for the owner to think that he must become an expert himself. It is his duty to get good men, know good work when he sees it and be willing to cooperate in every possible way to maintain the highest projection standards.

Any one of a large number of apparently small defects will have a decided effect in destroying the illusion which the producer has sought to create through the employment of a long list of artists and technical experts.

The theatre executive should realize the value of keeping his projection and other equipment in the best possible condition, and this can only be done by constant inspection. Care, experience, skill and pride in their work can be developed in the projectionist by the theatre owner if he is reasonably interested in his employees, and, of course, they are the one who will keep equipment in the right condition, or report when it is not. The intermittent sprocket for example, is a comparatively small part of a projector, but it is of vital importance. Without a smoothly running sprocket it is impossible to have steady projection, and as soon as the teeth show signs of wear they should be replaced. The time to replace the sprocket is not when projection shows notable faults, since wear on even a single tooth will do a lot of harm. An unsteady picture will cause eye-strain, and an undercut sprocket tooth damages the fine edge of the sprocket holes, which eventually results in print replacement. Excessive film replacement constitutes a heavy overhead, which in the end somebody must pay for. And so on, throughout the entire projection department.

The theatre owner should also keep in mind the possibility of fire, which, of course, is the result of damaged film caused by defective parts. The intermittent sprocket has been selected as an outstanding cause of poor projection and danger, but there are many other parts which will cause much harm if neglected. "A stitch in time saves nine," and "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." The theatre executive will be wise to avoid the possibility of unwise economy that may be induced by current business conditions.

YOUR SOUND EQUIPMENT

By AARON NADELL

Sound and Projection Engineer

PERIODICAL rehabilitation of sound equipment involves consideration of (a) those factors which are common to every part of the equipment, and (b) those which are peculiar to each separate portion of it. Although these two classifications overlap to some extent, maintaining the distinction will contribute to the clarity of this discussion.

I

Common Factors

Vibration

VIBRATION may be transmitted through a seemingly solid floor to apparently rigid apparatus, or it may be electrically created in such apparatus. The vibration surrounding the projector head, and its effects, may be regarded as one of the problems peculiar to that portion of the apparatus. The present discussion relates to more general forms of that trouble, such as may affect any portion of the apparatus. The effects of vibration are harmful chiefly to nut-and-bolt connections, and to soldered contacts.

In any general check-up of sound equipment, nut-and-bolt connections (both electrical and merely physical) should be carefully checked, and tightened wherever vibration has loosened them. The addition of lock-washers is indicated wherever tightening has been found necessary. Power transformers, which are exceptionally subject to electrically created vibration, should be given especial attention. Often these transformers will be so constructed that only nuts and bolts hold them together. Whenever such nuts loosen so far that the thin metal strips, or laminations, of the transformer are free to vibrate, an a.c. hum is introduced into the sound.

Loud speakers and their immediate surroundings are also somewhat subject to electrically-created mechanical vibration. In the case of some types of speakers, loss of volume can occasionally be traced to the fact that the bolt holding the copper-oxide rectifier units together has become loosened through the vibrations of the speaker.

Soldered contacts are often subject to deterioration through vibration. Even a perfect contact may be weakened, when the mass of the solder is small or vibration is great; and imperfections are brought to light that without vibration might never give any trouble. This is especially true of cold joints and resin joints. These will sometimes carry current without trouble for months or even, more rarely, for years, until they give way suddenly and perhaps stop a show. (Aside from the effects of vibration, electro-chemical action between two metals may result in corrosion of a soldered contact, especially when an acid flux has been used.)

Since bad soldering may reveal itself, or good soldering deteriorate, after almost any interval, periodic inspection of this matter should be continued throughout the life of the equipment—and will as a matter of course constitute part of any general inspection. Those soldered contacts, which were made in the projection room—as part of process of joining the several portions of the equipment during installation, will naturally be given chief attention, since they may always be regarded as having been made under adverse conditions, perhaps by workmen not thoroughly familiar with that kind of work. But trouble with the factory-made contacts within each separate piece of apparatus, although less common, is far from being unknown, and those contacts can not be neglected with safety upon any theory that they were made under supposedly ideal conditions. Experience shows that the factory is sometimes far from infallible.

Complete check for bad joints, and resoldering as necessary, should be a periodic routine.

Dirt

Dirt—according to its classical definition of "matter out of place"—calls for chief attention in any general overhaul of equipment. In the generic projection room, dirt is principally of two kinds—grease and carbon dust. Occasionally concrete dust from the projection room floor may complicate matters slightly.

Carbon dust in any exposed contact, as on a switch, key, rheostat or vacuum tube socket, tends toward noisy sound. Carbon-tetrachloride is a good cleanser—so is an ordinary, red-pencil eraser. Grease mixed with carbon dust may form a species of mud or "custard," with consequent microphonic sound, high resistance short-circuits, and other forms of trouble. Moreover, oil and grease lead to deterioration of rubber. Rubber pads, buffers and connectors which have become oil-soaked—are in line for replacement; rubber-covered wires or cables when saturated with oil may give rise to noisy sound and should also be replaced.

A general inspection and overhauling is the time when wires and cables that ordinarily are hidden in flexible conduit or otherwise concealed should be brought to light and inspected for signs of oil-saturation, whenever they are so located that this form of trouble is even remotely possible. Amplifiers or other apparatus that may be subject to collecting oil or grease should be gone over thoroughly and washed, if necessary, with carbon-tetrachloride or other cleaning fluid. Switches, rheostats and other contacts that may have become subject to dirt, but are too difficult of access for ordinary inspections, should be thoroughly overhauled and cleaned at these special times.

HEAT

Rubber is affected by heat, as well as by oil or grease. Heat also breaks down other forms of insulation, baking out wax or tar which may have been used to fill condenser or transformer cases, or to

PROPER INSPECTION

By CHARLES ("CHICK") LEWIS

Editor, Managers' Round Table, Motion Picture Herald

IF SOME showmen are a bit careless about keeping a close check on their theatre's equipment, or perhaps are leaving it to others to watch closely, check it off as a hang-over from the good old boom days of show business.

Whether we like to admit it or not, it remains a fact, nevertheless, that when profits were large, personal interest in the physical equipment of the theatre was relaxed. That goes not alone for show business, but for lots of other businesses as well. It is when profits start dwindling until the eye detects a shade of red that we begin to sit up and take notice about this repair bill and that piece of new equipment made necessary through what we once considered "ordinary" wear and tear. Therefore, keeping in mind the everpresent idea of holding expenses and costs down to a minimum, let us take a stroll through the theatre and see where immediate attention is necessary with the thought uppermost that a few cents well spent today may save hundreds of dollars later.

It has been proved many times in the past that it is far more economical to take care of what you have than to permit depreciation to get the upper hand. This goes for almost every detail of your theatre, and if you can keep your house in proper condition you will soon find that it's a cheaper process than letting things "go to the dogs" with the resultant loss of good will and with costly breakdowns.

Here we are standing across the street from our theatre. Our critical eye is taking in every detail of that front. Is it inviting, clean, bright and cheerful? Or is it dirty, dilapidated, gloomy and beginning to look like a morgue, rather than a place of entertainment?

Your signs. The upright and the marquee. Will they stand a new coat of paint and a relamping? This portion of your front may not stand out as the best looking spot during the day, but don't forget that after dark it is supposed to be the bright spot of the street at that point. Possibly the flasher lamps have been in service so long that they are faded and give a sickly appearance when turned on. If the color has been applied on the outside there may be a possibility of cleaning it off and redipping.

Ditto for the marquee flashing border. And the attraction letter channels. When were they last cleaned and given a coat of white enamel to help reflect the lights through the letters? The letters, too—are they wiped off before being used each change, or have they accumulated a smudge of dirt so as to make reading them from a distance simply impossible?

Another detail of a theatre front which has often been sadly neglected is the stone work. Did you know that several different acids are available at a very low cost which can be used on certain types of stone work to renew its finish and clean off the dirt? Possibly not. Well, it is so nevertheless, and this should be used several times a year. The better theatres never let their stone work become real dirty. It is cleaned every week if necessary.

Then we walk over from across the street for a closer view and inspection of the outside frames and under the marquee. Here we will find after a long and hard winter that the old weather man has been rather hard. Especially on those frames. But a good cleaning, sometimes with soap and warm water, will help get the dirt off, then a little stain and a coat of varnish will complete the spring cleaning process, and you have clean and bright-looking frames to match the rest of your renewed front and signs.

Surfaces under the marquee may call for another good washing, then a coat of flat white and a finishing coat of white enamel. The bulbs can be wiped off with a damp cloth and that's about all the attention they should require, provided they are still burning and not broken or dead, in which case, of course, they should be replaced.

And how about that outside box office? It is your theatre's first point of contact with the patron, and not only should it be kept in condition at all times, but the cashier sitting inside should reflect a cheerful inviting atmosphere.

Now let us look those entrance doors over carefully, because they have been subjected to some of the hardest treatment of the year. Kids mark them up. Polishing the brass door pulls and plates takes away a goodly share of the painting, and nature does the rest in the havoc of the winter's worse weather. By all means treat those doors as an important part of your theatre. It is through them that the patron must enter, and it is far from an inviting entrance if they look like the portals of a junk shop. Repainting them several times in the course of a year is none too often and it always enhances your theatre's front.

ALTHOUGH the expression has been used in connection with the front of a theatre, your lobby is more of a show-window than your front. It is inside the lobby that folks generally congregate to wait for friends who are going to join them at your show. It is here that they are first attracted to your special announcements of coming attractions, and it is here that your best "front" should be put on.

The average theatre lobby contains coming attraction frames, special displays, animated or art sets, and dozens of other slants, all designed to catch the eye and interest of those who frequent your theatre. It is here that they first feel the warmth and comfort of your theatre. And it is here that you ought to make them "shop" around while strolling through to the auditorium. Pay strict attention to all those frames, display sets and other parts of your lobby, and see that the lighting is in good condition. The entire set-up should radiate a feeling of brightness, comfort and good taste.

Before passing through the lobby and into the auditorium, we would also call your attention to the floor of the lobby. No matter what type of floor you may have, it must be as spotlessly clean as one can make it. Some houses have marble floors, others tile or terrazzo, and still others some form of composition tiling. Regardless of what your floor is made up of, you should be certain that it is mighty clean. If dirty, then all your other efforts to effect a bright lobby will go for nought. This is a feature of your lobby that must never be neglected.

A final glance should take in the wall space not covered by frames or other displays and the ceiling. Perhaps a little re-

MAINTENANCE VALUES

By H. E. McFarland

Maintenance Engineer

THE EXPRESSION, "judicious selection," used in another article, should not be confused with any procedure of normal maintenance. Judicious selection itself cannot make up for the omissions of maintenance. It has application to situations in which many operators find themselves by reason of neglect through curtailed budgets, by reason of transfer to them of run-down property, or by reason of careless management. It can also be used in reference to periodic renovation usually taking place during the period of lessened activity in any particular situation. It is in the latter case that the term has special application and meaning at this time, when all expenditures are carefully weighed before being made, and when extra thought is being given to omission, rather than commission.

The fact remains, however, and must be borne in mind, that the merchandiser of theatrical entertainment must first get his patrons into his establishment, following which he should provide them such unobstrusive comfort and convenience that they may enjoy his wares, however limited, with no thought of the methods employed. This comfort and convenience applies to the patron's physical self and must include all of his senses.

There are several methods of securing continued patronage among which the first and most important one is a reputation for good shows (good pictures, if you will), but the best of pictures cannot hold that patronage if the elements of comfort, convenience, service, sight and sound are missing in any measurable degree.

Other methods of drawing patronage initially are advertising, offers of prizes or rewards, and what, for a better term, might be called personality—personality as expressed and exhibited in the theatre itself, or as exemplified in its personnel, or in the manner of its showmanship. All of those methods likewise fail in their purpose if the elements previously mentioned are absent either entirely or in part.

It is therefore imperative that relative to competitive plants in its admission class or relative to competitive entertainment of comparable cost your theatre and my theatre must, in those elements previously mentioned, equal or surpass its competition or its right to live and prosper is in jeopardy.

IT IS NOT the province of this discourse to treat upon theatre construction and design, or shows and showmanship, as applied to the stage or screen, but rather to discuss informally that showmanship which makes the most use of the material things at hand for the purpose of drawing in a continued patronage, and providing for that patronage the ease, comfort and convenience that it should be entitled relatively to expect.

As Mr. Schutz has so aptly expressed it, the theatre must "display" its wares, must provide an unobtrusive "environment," and must adequately "reproduce" its stock in trade.

Its display consists of its exterior aspects, its vertical and marquee signs, its lighted soffits, its display frames, its attraction signs, its box office and the general illumination of its front.

It would seem unnecessary to state that there can be no selection as to illumination, or in other words, that all bulbs and all neon must be continually ready to do their part in the whole.

As to the other physical aspects of display, it may be seriously asserted that the actual finish has not the importance of completeness of finish, or in other words, that in the application of selection it is important that all portions must be covered with a finish and that all parts be intact. Beyond this, steam-cleaning or sand-blasting the facade, repainting the signs, soffits, frames, entrance and box office become entirely dependent upon the budget, and may in part be omitted, and hand-cleaning by the theatre staff resorted to. Neatness and cleanliness, however, are imperative.

In solving your display problem, therefore, make sure that no member or part is missing or unfinished, that the whole is clean, and then apply your limited paint budget first to your soffit, second to your frames and entrance, and latterly to your signs, bearing in mind that glass enamel followed by spar varnish should always be the medium for soffit, and that preferably a clear white be used, following which regular washing will preserve the appearance and defer future renovations. The use of spar varnish, or its equivalent in lacquer, is always indicated for these exterior locations.

IT SHOULD also be apparent that there can be no selection in reference to the mechanical action of display. Interrupted, jumpy, or faulty flasher action should not be permitted or tolerated, and where operators are unable or unwilling to maintain or replace equipment of this nature, resort should be had to those companies which contract to install and maintain. There should be no procrastination in respect to this feature, unless resort is had to steady burning in an unsurmountable emergency, and then only in those situations where steady burning does not manifestly destroy an illusion.

The instrument of "display" does not end with the show window of the theatre forever, but must be considered in its interior relationship to environment as well. However, the same principal of completeness of finish and part can here be reapplied. Your patrons should be able to pass through your house without the walking surface being called to attention by incongruity or omissions in its parts, and certainly not with actual danger confronting them. Likewise they should be able to circulate freely without defect of finish or illumination intruding on the consciousness. Beyond this you add individuality and added display, or added environment, if you will.

To repeat, first assure yourself that your internal aspects as respects floors, finish, illumination, seats, drapes, etc., are complete, then apply selection, first to your foyers and public standing space, thence to your proscenium, and then rear-ward up the balcony, if any, to the rear of the house. But assure yourself that always those more intimate and swollen portions, such as the women's and men's retiring rooms and toilets are in perfect order as respects convenience, finish and appointment.

In this connection it is well to consider specifically a reference to furniture, always a considerable and varying problem. It might be said categorically that no furniture at all is better than broken-down or excessively damaged articles. Many theatre operators find themselves unable to maintain, because of the type of their patronage, any furniture at all, and only the most unbreakable type of furnishings, unless such equipment is under the constant observation of their staff.

To return to the sequence mentioned in the previous paragraph, it might also be asserted that your theatre's finish, as to eye value, may be slighted in the ratio of the decrease in illumination, and also that your illumination may be modulated to the finish in any effort to adjust your finish expenditures, but that it is unwise to reduce the lighting effect of your lobbies and in certain instances your foyers. It is here, everything else being equal, that your limited expenditure should be made.

Carpet serves a utilitarian purpose, but is nevertheless an item of display as well as environment. It may even assist in reproduction by the qualities of absorption it possesses. It may be argued that from the point of view of the latter two items that any carpet will do, but from the point of view of display this is not so. However, where carpet must be replaced, the original pattern and quality may be varied from at breaks in stairs, aisles or rooms, when expediency dictates, without ill effect, provided the pattern is in the same school of color or design, or becomes a plain color similar to the body of the original. All carpet should be lined, and false economy in the selection of lining material is well nigh suicidal. Carpet with a close weave and hard high pile will be found best in its weaving quality.

ONE OF THE most important considerations in connection with patrons' comfort is manifestly temperature and humidity, and for some considerable time vast sums of money have been spent by operators in an effort to build up this invaluable item of both display and environment. Such operations as have solved this problem are now indeed fortunate, those who have not, must shortly face the drop in summer attendance unameliorated by the drawing power of conditioned air.

If some method of air circulation and distribution within the auditorium has not already been provided, serious thought should be given to the installation of such a system if conditions do not indicate the advisability of conditioned and properly circulated air. No fixed rule can be advanced in this connection, but it is not alone sufficient that the foul air be exhausted. Actual movement of air over, and to some extent around, the audience should be provided. Various systems make use of washers, melting ice, and cold water coils as a medium for lowering the temperatures, each successful in the degree as it fits the particular situation. Recourse should be had to accredited engineers.

In respect to heat, most theatres are more fortunate, and where problems do exist, rectification may be defined somewhat, allowing sufficient time for completion before fall demand, unless expediency

MOTION picture theatre design since last fall still reflects the pursuit of opulent fantasy expressed in modern elements, and the persistence of the period style in its atmospheric tradition. With construction curtailed, experiment was restricted to forms that had already had some measure of approval. Attention is therefore drawn rather to the adaptation of materials. A notable exception to the general trend is the first theatre incorporating the parabolic reversed floor, introduced theoretically during 1931, which slopes the main floor, according to mathematical factors based on sight lines, toward the rear of the auditorium. Many other theatres than those represented here could have been chosen had space permitted. Those shown, however, indicate the trend.

LIGHTING YOUR LOBBY TO MAKE IT SELL

A solution for almost every display problem, explained in word and diagram

By C. M. CUTLER

IMPORTANT functions of the lobby are to greet the theatregoer, to give an effect of sparkle, gayety and warmth, and then, after the show, to leave an impression that stimulates a return visit.

Such a lobby presents a favorable atmosphere in which to call attention to coming attractions. To direct attention instintively there are various means available. A high brightness or a brilliant contrasting color is very effective. A high brightness, in addition to attracting attention, facilitates reading, making it easier to grasp every detail of the illustration.

In some theatres of recent design, the architects have provided recesses of sufficient depth in order that posters or other illustrations can be smoothly lighted. This is done by lamps located in two rows of reflectors concealed in the margin of the recess. Too often, however, insufficient depth is provided, with resulting spotty illumination of the poster, making it almost unreadable and of little advertising value.

A recessed panel with a flat vertical back wall, which is one of the simpler types, gives an opportunity for satisfactory lighting if the cavity is sufficiently deep. Fig. 1 suggests the placement of reflectors and their relation to the surface to be lighted. Some general dimension rules to be noted are: Distance D should be at least one-fourth of W. The spacing S between reflectors should not be over D multiplied by 1.5. The reflectors should be placed as far forward from the rear surface as possible and should be concealed from view. Lamps of 40 or 60 watts in the reflectors suggested, will produce sufficient brightness for most cases. However, in very bright lobbies with light-colored walls around the poster panel, it might be desirable to increase the size of lamps to 75 or 100 watts

Where space does not permit reflectors to be concealed on either side of the recess, a cavity of the contour shown in Fig. 2a, with reflectors laced at the top, is a satisfactory substitute. Here the same ratios apply as in Fig. 1, except that 150 to 200-watt lamps should be used. This scheme can be inverted (Fig. 2b) with the reflectors at the bottom and with the slant of the back wall reversed.

Where a recessed space has not been provided, or if it is too shallow to light smoothly, a lobby display can sometimes be effectively lighted from a concealed spotlight. This is best concealed in a space in the ceiling, or possibly in one of the lighting fixtures, which, of course, should be located relatively near the display space. The light can be confined to the poster surface by masking the spotlight lens. However, in many cases it is better to use spread lenses that fit the shape of the beam to the desired area. No light is then lost due to masking. In addition, the spread lenses smooth out the filament streaks, giving a uniform spot. The use of a dark, light-absorbing material, such as black velvet, as a background around the poster, helps to keep any light that may fall over the edges from being noticeable.

If spotlights are placed in a hanging fixture, it should be hung so that it does not sway and so that the beams of light move away from the posters. Spotlights are very useful in lighting portable advertisements in frames or shadow boxes that are placed almost anywhere in the lobby. It should be remembered that the poster and the spotlight should be so located that persons passing the display will not cast shadows upon it.

Another method of lighting posters that are placed directly on the wall or in shallow recesses, is by placing below the poster a box containing reflectors. Such a unit can be portable if desired, lighted from behind, finished to match the surroundings and equipped with an extension cord for plugging into the nearest wall outlet. Lamp wattage, spacing, etc., should be the same as for the built-in system shown in Fig. 2.

The space over the lobby exit doorways is a logical place from which to give the departing patron an impressive reminder of coming events. A recess (Fig. 5) here permits the use of solid letters or illustrations lighted from the front, or translucent displays, or opaque silhouettes.

Lighted translucent posters and photographic "stills" are effective in the lobby and deserve a greater use. Many of those that are lighted are objectionably spotty, which detracts from their appearance and readability. In Fig. 6 is shown an arrangement of lamps that will insure smooth

THE REVERSED FLOOR SLOPE IN PRACTICE

The Schlanger principle, introduced theoretically in 1931, receives its initial application in the Thalia theatre, New York

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

[ALL PHOTOS FOR BETTER THEATRES BY KEYSTONE-UNDERWOOD]

The view on this page, showing the auditorium looking from the lower left side toward the screen, indicates the reversed pitch of the floor at the point where it is greatest. To the rear of this location the floor slope quickly flattens out.

SOME NEW ideas in theatre design and construction, recently developed on paper, have now taken actual shape in the Thalia, a new small theatre located at 95th Street and Broadway, New York City. Here a completely new theatre form presents itself for the most practical test possible—that of housing the patron. In this little cinema we do not have merely another commercial theatre project, but it may be regarded as also a laboratory in which we can definitely begin a revaluation of some of the rigidly entrenched practices in the science of planning a theatre for cinematic entertainment.

Seemingly, the motion picture has always taken second place when the principles of auditorium design have been under consideration. As a result of this, the suitable housing of motion picture exhibition has progressed very little in comparison with the attainments of the motion picture itself.

The Thalia presents a number of interesting devices, but doubtless this 300-seat house is most significant as the first theatre to be designed with the parabolic reversed floor introduced last year before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

It will be recalled that in an effort to correct faults in existing types of orchestra floor seating, Ben Schlanger, New York architect, had developed a plan in which the slope of the orchestra floor is reversed, bringing the high point of the floor nearer to the screen instead of at the rear of the auditorium, as is now the case. The screen is raised above the level of the eye-line of the first row of seats nearest the screen. This plan includes a systematic tilting of the backs of the chairs on the reversed orchestra floor slope. By tilting the body backward, and permitting the higher part of the floor in front of the seat to support the feet, a comfortable position of the patron is sought which yet allows him to obtain a complete view of the screen without having to raise his head from its natural position. The slope of the reversed floor automatically establishes the proper pitch for the backs of the seats in every row, eliminating the need for specially adjusted chair backs and changes in the standards and leg supports of the chairs. All chairs can then be exactly alike in every detail of construction. Instead of designing differently constructed seats to fit a floor slope, as is now necessary, the floor is designed to suit uniform seating. It is as though the seats were placed in an ideal position for viewing the screen, the floor being built afterward to support the seats in the proper manner.

An analysis of bodily posture in theatre chairs was made by Schlanger in connection with this principle. Certain maximum and minimum pitches of chair backs and floor slopes were arrived at, and measurements have been made of the vertical range of vision which can be obtained while sitting against differently pitched chair backs.

The slope of the orchestra floor in existing theatres is not sufficient to permit seeing the bottom of the screen over the head of the person immediately ahead, for if the pitch were sufficient for this purpose, it would be too great for comfortable walking and would make it difficult to adjust the standards and leg supports of chairs to the slope of the floor. The pitch of the reversed floor necessary to allow full view of the bottom of the screen, is very slight. It has been observed that a full comfortable view of the entire screen can not usually be obtained until the ninth row of the present orchestra floor slope because of both neck and eye strain. The reversed floor seeks to correct this condition, as well as some others.

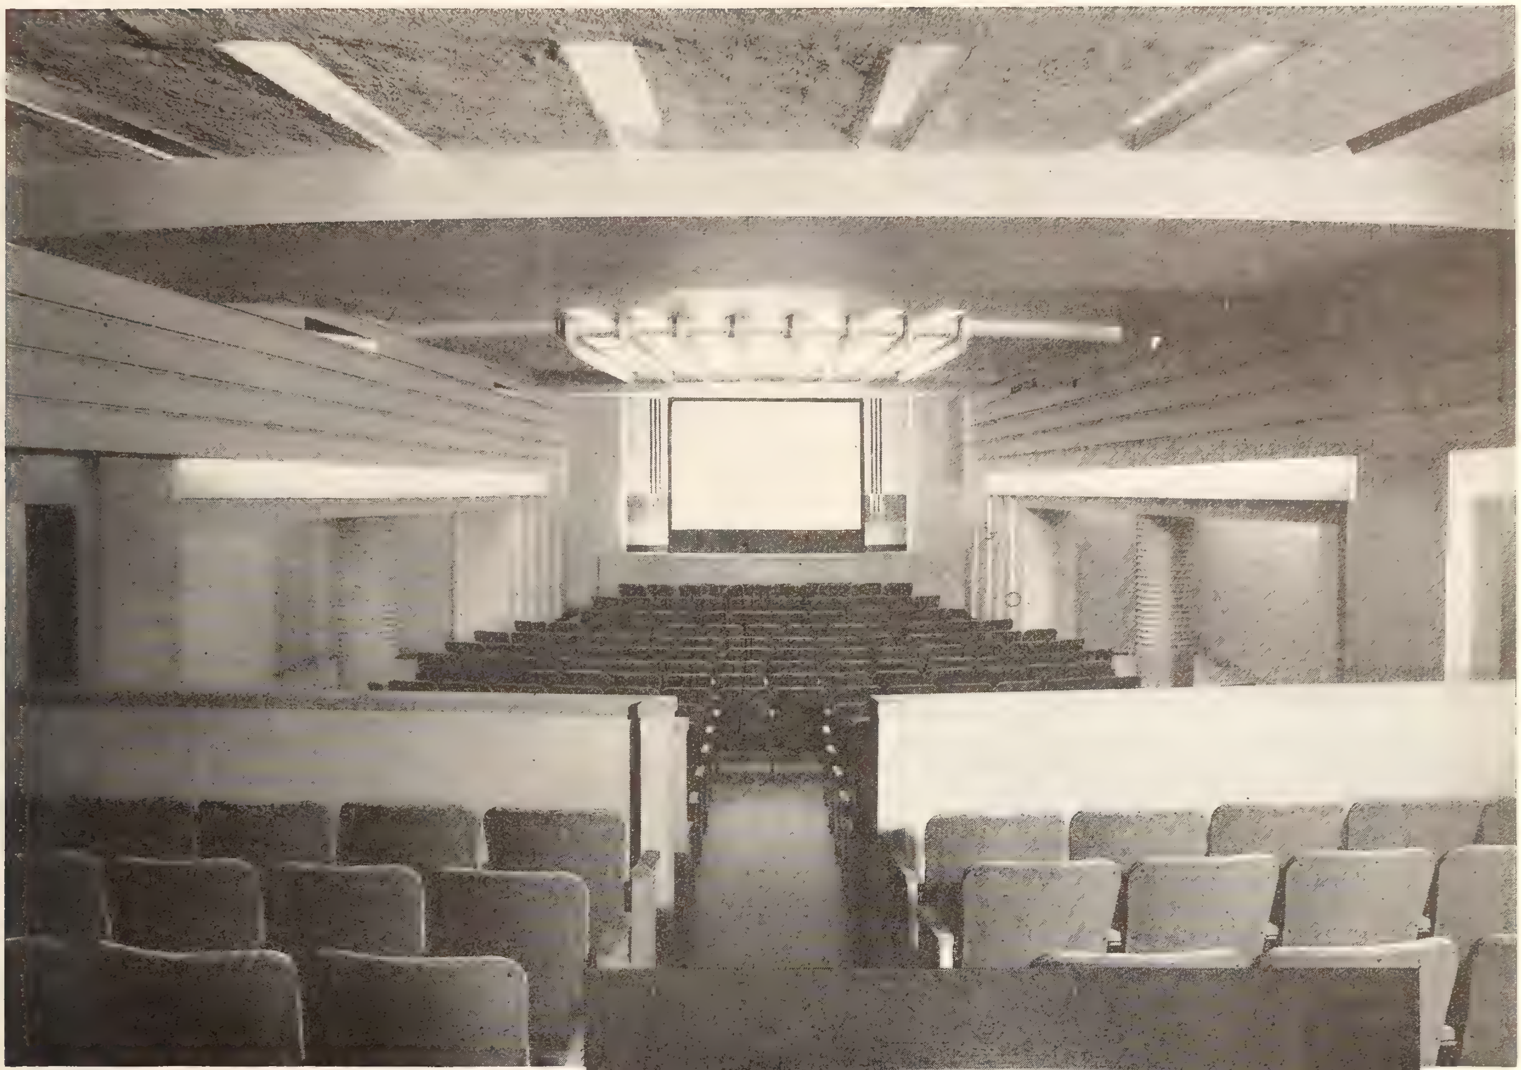
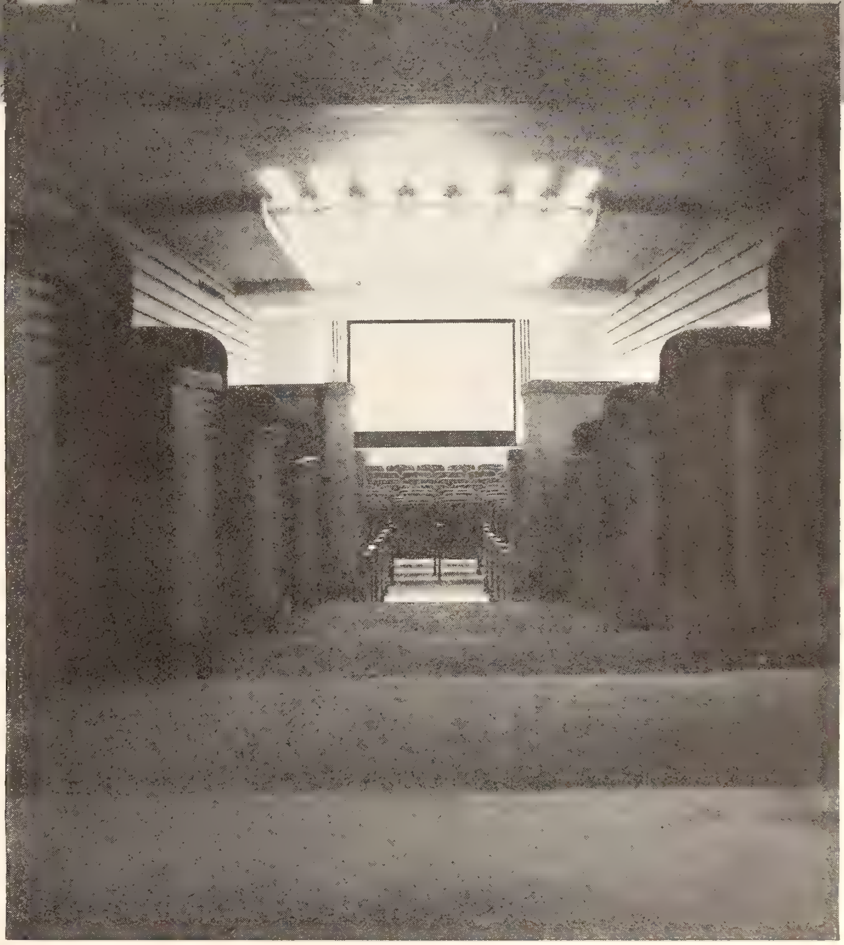
It is located within an existing three-story commercial and theatre structure, the major part of which is occupied by a fairly large motion picture theatre. That theatre is directly over the new theatre. The plot of ground is on a corner, the street level of which is high on one frontage, and low on the other, thus giving a street level entrance to the new theatre despite its sublevel position.

It was necessary for the theatre to be planned within the structural confines of the existing building. Any structural changes in order to accommodate the new theatre would have been prohibitive in cost. A limited headroom of 12 feet, six inches, and a maximum clear distance of 27 feet between the existing structural steel columns, presented a rather difficult problem. The plan had originally called for rear projection (from behind the screen).





Two views of the auditorium from the loge section toward the screen. Above, with full lighting, giving a comprehensive view of the entire room. Right, indicating effect under colored illumination. The forward rise of the floor is clearly discernible

Such equipment was not definitely available at the time, and therefore the owners were willing to try the reversed floor principle because it would permit the construction of the theatre within the prescribed physical limitations, and also would make possible the use of standard projection equipment.

The general plan arrangement of the Thalia is developed entirely on one floor, eliminating all stair climbing. The main entrance is located on 95th Street. A simple modern facade has as its main feature a marquee, which has a directional effect in design. The treatment of the lobby is consistent with the exterior. It is brightly illuminated by indirect trough lighting in directional forms in the ceiling.

The second set of doors leading from the lobby opens on to a baffle wall, which separates the auditorium from the lobby and shuts out the street noises and drafts.

The auditorium seating plan is broken up in such a manner as to obtain intimate seating groups. All seats are arranged to permit access with a minimum of disturbance to seated patrons. There are 200 orchestra seats, and 100 loge seats. All the chairs, which are by Heywood-Wakefield, are upholstered in gray velour, and have solid wood end standards especially designed for the Thalia. A crossover in front of the loges separates the reversed orchestra slope portion from a slightly raised loge section at the rear.

Considerable lounging space is provided for so small a house. The single lounge is located behind both auditorium and projection room, with passages permitting the patron to go from the lobby to the opposite side of the auditorium through the lounge. Built-in modernistic furniture is used here, while there is also a small serving bar for dispensing beverages.

Besides those in seating and sight-line characteristics, the Thalia presents innovations in acoustical treatment. In addition to the use of acoustical plaster on certain surfaces, there are also incorporated new methods devised by V. A. Schlenker, New York consulting engineer in acoustics. A low ceiling over the side aisles, ostensibly an architectural feature, really houses ventilation ducts and also forms a vertical curtain wall from the main ceiling level down to the aisle ceiling level. This wall, as it is designed, also has special acoustical properties. In addition, low ceilings over the side aisles, the ceiling over the loges and the ceiling near the screen, are all treated with acoustic plaster, which is left undecorated except for pigmentation giving it an over-all color.

The basic acoustic principles used by Schlenker especially seek to prevent the low-frequency components of the sound from masking the high-frequency components so essential to good articulation and naturalness.

The architectural character of the walls and ceiling has been inspired entirely by the acoustical and lighting treatments employed. The technical and architectural factors have been considered as one class of problems. Ornamentation is totally absent in the treatment of the entire interior. Simple directional lines, all blending toward the focal point—the screen—are the dominant motifs, worked out in parallel or stepped horizontal planes. These planes are formed

MODERN SEATING AND CHAIR MAINTENANCE

VI.—Selection, Inspection and Care

By A. C. HOVEN

Here in handbook style is summarized practical procedure in seating problems with a view toward both efficiency and true economy

FOREGOING ARTICLES have told how to keep theatre chairs in the best possible condition, and how to select new theatre chairs to insure the least possible maintenance. The purpose of this article is to suggest a program for maintaining theatre chairs, and to give a check-list for use in considering new chairs. Some of the points mentioned in this article have been covered in previous articles, but they are repeated here so that all points will be available for ready reference.

CHAIRS ALREADY INSTALLED

File the name and address of the firm who manufactured your theatre chairs, and also the address of their nearest office. This record will be of value when you wish to secure advice or repair parts. Theatre chair manufacturers will be glad to give you the benefit of their experience in any problem concerning seating which may confront you.

File all installation and maintenance instructions sent out by the theatre chair manufacturer. If necessary to make repairs, do any cleaning, make any changes in locations, or corect any faults in installation, these instructions will give the necessary information.

Encourage men held responsible for maintenance to report loose, worn, damaged or broken parts. All efficient theatre owners stress economy, but maintenance men should not be given the impression that letting needed repairs go is economy, or that they will be criticized for reporting an item which involves some expense. It is certainly true that it is cheaper to keep theatre chairs in first-class condition than it is to allow them to become dilapidated, and then to restore them to good condition, but this fact is not realized by many workmen. With the constant emphasis on keeping costs down it is very natural for a workman to get the impression that he is being extravagant if he requests repair parts. It is well known that men will grumble about working with inadequate equipment and will grumble because the management does not keep equipment in good condition, but it will not occur to them that these conditions are their own fault because of failure to request what they should have.

Give some one person the responsibility for keeping theatre chairs in first class condition. To do this it is not necessary to hire some one for this work. The amount of time required to keep chairs in first-class condition is very small, but unless some one person accepts it as his responsibility, nothing will be done to correct a defective condition until it has become serious. Giving one man the responsibility has the added advantage that such a man becomes experienced in repairing chairs. Where there is some condition which he does not know how to overcome, he should take the matter up with the management, and they can correspond with the theatre chair manufacturer and learn exactly how the condition can be corrected.

In chair inspections made by factory representatives many instances are found where conditions which should have been corrected and were not because no one knew how to go about it, or because some replacement parts were necessary. If the management had selected some one man to be responsible for the correction of these conditions and had trained him to report any defects which he could not correct, the management could have secured for him the necessary information or parts. This condition exists quite often in connection with floor fastening, particularly where there is a poor floor and where concrete has broken out. For a period of years, during and just after the war, a number of very poor concrete floors were laid. In theatres having such floors a considerable amount of time is lost each week going over certain chairs which were anchored in bad concrete. Makeshift attempts are made to fasten the chairs, but the methods used do not give lasting results. Instead of using the proper type of anchor, expedients are resorted to, and the total amount of work and annoyance is far in excess of that required if the workmen had called this condition to the attention of the management and they had reported the condition existing to the theatre chair manufacturer and obtained his advice as to what would correct the condition.

Chair inspection on a routine basis.—Have some plan which will provide for the inspection of every chair in the house at regular intervals. This does not require any very elaborate or technical service. There are operations performed throughout the house, such as sweeping and cleaning, which bring workmen in contact with all the chairs. If these workmen are trained to look for seat faults or breakage and report to the man in charge of chair maintenance, the condition can be corrected with very little effort.

WHAT HAS been said above might give the impression that theatre chairs are necessarily a source of trouble and annoyance. This is not always true. If theatre chairs are properly chosen, the theatre owner and his staff will be quite free from inordinate maintenance work, which is the result of defective workmanship and design, either in the chair or the floor. A maintenance program is still desirable, however, because there are a number of things which affect chair service that are beyond the control of the manufacturer.

If the concrete floor is below standard in quality, everything the chair manufacturer can do will not always eliminate loose chairs. Anchors are available which will hold in almost any concrete that is at all well laid, but even then there will be occasions when the condition of the floor is so bad that special measures will have to be taken to provide adequate anchoring. In addition to this, there is the maintenance work which is caused by abuse and vandalism. It is a rare thing for a theatre to go through its opening day without some permanent damage to some of the chairs. There are, however, a number of points which the theatre owner should have in mind when he is purchasing his chairs, if he wishes to keep his maintenance cost down to the minimum.

NEW CHAIRS

Consider firms which have a past record to indicate that they will continue permanently in the business of making theatre chairs. Unless the theatre chair manufacturer from whom you purchase chairs remains in business, the first recommendation

THE 1,800-SEAT PARAMOUNT IN BOSTON

Describing a new Publix house of "intimate" type in the central business section of the New England metropolis

CONSIDERING the character of the new Paramount theatre in Boston as a prominent downtown house, it is really of the smaller, intimate type. To make room for it, an historic old hotel, the Adams House, was demolished, giving the theatre an important location on Washington Street. Yet there are only 1,800 seats.

The theatre was erected by the A. H. Realty Company, with Paramount Publix as lessees. The building is almost exclusively devoted to the theatrical enterprise, the only non-theatrical space consisting in two small stores, one on each side of the vestibule. Overall dimensions of the building are 70 feet in width, and 160 feet in depth. The building is of steel construction, fireproof throughout, with facing at the front in cast stone. The architectural and decorative style is modern, with the interior following an ornate pattern.

Seating in the Boston Paramount is divided between two floors, 1,050 being on the main level, and 750 in a balcony. The former are arranged in 37 rows, while the balcony has 26 rows. The chairs are full-upholstered with fabric coverings in harmony with the decorative treatment, the design being by Publix and manufacture and installation by Heywood-Wakefield.

The projection room is 35 feet across, and 12 feet in depth. The generator room is directly adjoining. Projection room walls and ceiling are finished in acoustic plaster, tinted a buff color. Provision is made for three projectors, but only two are thus far installed. There are also one spotlight and an effect machine. The projectors have Simplex heads and Peerless lamps on Publix bases. Rectification is by Roth motor-generators.

The angle of projection in the Paramount is approximately 20°, while the distance from the first row of seats to the screen is about 20 feet.

The view on this page of the Boston Paramount's auditorium, shows the panel treatment of the walls, a decorative element which serves also as concealment for acoustic material behind damask.

The theatre is heated almost entirely through the ventilation system, which is of the plenum type incorporating refrigeration by Carrier. The same system is carried to all the public rooms outside the auditorium, with exhausts from the main floor and balcony plenum spaces, and with separate toilet room exhausts. Steam is supplied by a central public heating station.

Acoustical treatment of the auditorium consists in acoustic plaster throughout the entire surface of the ceiling and parts of the rear and side walls. The side walls also have fabric panels concealing rock wool.

The auditorium is equipped with facilities for colored lighting on a dimmer system, incorporated in the decorative scheme. The ceiling has a cove arrangement worked out in a central placque, and there is also a large chandelier. Other fixtures consist in small brackets at the pilasters. Switchboards are by Frank Adam.

The theatre is entered through a vestibule and lobby, which latter leads into a main foyer abutting the auditorium and also gives access by stairs to a mezzanine promenade. The mezzanine level has men's and women's lounges, besides containing the theatre offices. The basement level, in addition to accommodating mechanical equipment, contains the main lounge, with adjoining men's and women's lounges and toilet rooms, and a check room.

The lobby is decorated in walnut and ebony. The mezzanine promenade is treated in a manner similar to that of the auditorium. The latter has walls done in aluminum paint and gold leaf, with damask panels. The ceiling is brilliantly colorful, the scheme being dominated by unusual shades of blues and reds, with portions picked out in gold leaf. There is but a single organ loft, and this is located above the stage, instead of at the sides (one learns that the management contemplate some kind of combination of organ music with the mechanical sound). The organ is by Wurlitzer. Stage facilities are adapted to presentations. The proscenium opening is 30x35 feet.

A striking feature of the Boston Paramount is its immense sign and marquee. The latter extends the full width of the building, 80 feet at this point. It is of exceptionally heavy design, for it is associated with emergency exits from the balcony level, giving access to the street by means of cantilever fire-escapes. The sign is vertical and large enough to accommodate over 9,700 lamps.

The Boston Paramount was erected under a general contract held by the George B. H. Macomber Company. Richard B. Fleming of the Paramount Publix construction department, supervised the project, while the architect was Arthur H. Bowditch of Boston.

George Laby, for the last three years manager of the Washington Street Olympia in Boston, has been appointed managing director of the Paramount. Laby was at one time manager of the Rialto in New York, and later held a similar position in New Haven, Conn. His first managerial position for Publix followed graduation from the circuit's managers' school, he being named house manager of the Metropolitan in Boston.

The upper view on this page is of the foyer looking toward the lobby, showing the stairs leading to the mezzanine level. The other view shows a corner of cosmetic room off the women's lounge.

Erection and opening of the Paramount in Boston at this time is interesting beyond the physical character of the house because of the Publix curtailment of construction adopted as a rigid policy during the present economic uncertainty. In connection with the opening of the New Boston house, G. Ralph Branton, general manager of the New England division of the circuit, issued a statement bearing out observations that had already been made by others—to the effect that conditions in New England are definite on the mend. Said Branton:

"New England is leading the nation back to prosperity. There is no denying that we have been going through a depression that has taxed every line of business and every individual and that much hardship has resulted, but in the history of the United States we have gone through similar eras of 'bad times.'

"Reports from all quarters clearly in-

DECISIONS IN THEATRE CASES

By LEO T. PARKER

Recent higher court decisions in litigations involving a variety of legal questions pertinent to theatres, here analyzed for theatre owner and manager

COMPLIANCE WITH STATE LAWS

A THEATRE owner is liable generally, in damages for any injuries sustained by patrons as a result of his failure to comply with state laws which specify the construction of a theatre. For illustration, in Bunce v. Grand and Sixth theatre, (238 N. W. 867), it was shown that a state law provides:

"Every owner of a . . . public building . . . shall so construct, repair or maintain such . . . public building, and every architect shall so prepare the plans for the construction of such . . . public building, as to render the same safe."

Another law provides that the term "safe" means "such freedom from danger to the safety of the public as the nature of the public building will reasonably permit."

A theatre patron was injured when he stumbled over a step which was not properly illuminated. He filed suit against the theatre owner to recover damages. In holding the theatre owner liable, the court said:

"A person entering a well lighted public building is quite likely to be so engrossed in the object of his entry as not to be anticipating or looking for impediments that may cause him to stumble, and that women will enter public toilets for women accompanied by small children engrossed in speedily attending to pressing physical needs of their charges is not beyond the realm of reasonable anticipation. . . . Ordinances or orders can hardly be framed to cover every conceivable situation. Those in evidence relate to the dimensions and surface of steps, not to their location. In absence of an order applicable to the situation involved, the question presented . . . is one for the jury as to whether or not the premises were so constructed and maintained as to be reasonably safe. . . . A place must not only be reasonably safe, as it was required to be by our common-law decisions, but it must be as 'free from danger as the nature will reasonably permit'."

Proof of Negligence

ONE IMPORTANT point of the law, upheld by all higher courts, is that an injured patron who sues a theatre owner to recover damages for an injury, is bound to prove negligence on the part of the theatre owner, or his authorized employes, otherwise no liability exists. The latest higher court case involving this point of the law is Farrow v. John R. Thompson Company, (137 So. 604).

The facts of this case are that a patron, while walking down an aisle, slipped and fell sustaining severe injuries. She sued the proprietor to recover damages and testified that the reason she slipped was because the aisle was slippery on account of soap water having been left on the floor by scrubbers employed by the proprietor.

However, the patron failed to introduce convincing testimony proving that this alleged negligence on the part of the employes resulted in the injury. Therefore, the lower court held the injured patron not entitled to recover damages, and the higher court sustained this judgment, saying:

"The owner or proprietor must exercise ordinary care and prudence to keep the aisles, passageways, floors, and walks in a reasonably safe condition. . . . However, in order to maintain an action against the owner for apparent defects in the building two elements must concur, viz., fault on the part of the master (theatre owner), and ignorance of danger on the part of the customer. . . . Our conclusion is that the judgment of the trial court is correct for the reason that plaintiff (patron) has failed to make out her case."

Duty to Maintain Safety

ON THE OTHER HAND, various courts have held that a theatre owner is bound to use diligence and care to keep the premises safe for public use and that patrons have a right to assume he has performed this duty. Therefore, when a person is injured by reason of some defect, the burden is on the theatre owner to show that it could not have been prevented by human foresight. This rule of the law is applicable under all circumstances where the theatre owner attempts to avoid liability on the grounds that an injury resulted from a defect that could not have been discovered by the application of ordinary care.

For instance, in the late United States higher court case of Kehoe v. Central Amusement Company, (52 F. [2d] 916), it was disclosed that a patron was seriously injured as a result of defective equipment. He sued to recover damages. Considerable doubt existed as to whether or not the defect causing the injury could have been eliminated by the application of ordinary care on the part of the proprietor. The latter failed to introduce testimony showing that such defect could not have been repaired or detected by the application of ordinary care. Therefore, although the lower court held the patron not entitled to recover damages, the higher court reversed this verdict, and said:

"It can be fairly said that it is the clear duty of those operating a public amusement place to so operate it as to protect its patrons from injury. . . . Where the thing that causes the injury is under its exclusive control and management, and the accident is such that in the ordinary course of experience it would not have happened, if proper care had been used, an inference of negligence arises, and the burden is on the defendant (proprietor) to exonerate itself from fault."

Fire Escape Injury

IT IS WELL settled law that a theatre owner may be liable in damages for an injury sustained by a patron, although the device which effected the injury is approved by public officials. This point of the law is applicable, if it is shown that the injury resulted from negligence on the part of the theatre owner.

For example, in Blanks v. Saenger Theatres, (138 So. 883), it was shown that a theatre patron emerged from the theatre and was proceeding toward her home when she was suddenly struck from above by a metal automatic fire escape drop ladder. One end of this ladder was attached to the building about twelve feet above the level of the sidewalk and the entire ladder was held suspended, parallel with the sidewalk, by means of a counter-balancing weight and chain. The ladder is so constructed that in case of fire the weight of a person causes the unattached end to descend to the sidewalk in such position as to allow free passage down. The theatre patron was not aware of any danger, but just as she was walking under the ladder the unattached end suddenly descended without warning upon her and struck the right side of her face and head. It developed afterward that the cause of the ladder falling was that a young boy, apparently about fourteen years of age, stepped upon it from the iron balcony and caused the unattached end to descend to the sidewalk as it was designed to do.

The injured patron sued the theatre

TRANSIENT DISTORTION INTRODUCED BY HORN TYPE SPEAKERS

By VESPER A. SCHLENKER

Analyses of actual measurements made in representative motion picture theatres by a leading acoustical engineer

THE "RELATIVE PERFECTION" toward which the talking pictures are said to be moving can not be realized as long as a single element is relatively imperfect. The horn type loudspeaker in conjunction with the picture screen is one of the units in the whole talking picture equipment which deserves far more attention by engineers than it now receives.

The perfect illusion of talking pictures can not be obtained by synchronization alone. Not only must the pictures be very natural, but also the sound itself must be very realistic. In other words the sound must possess high quality.

One of the requirements for high quality which has received almost exclusive attention, is that single frequency measurements over the audible spectrum show a constant efficiency of reproduction. In the case of the loudspeaker, a constant input will maintain a constant intensity of sound in front where the listener is ordinarily located.

The results of a test of this kind are shown in the form of an oscillogram (Figure 1). The electrical input is held constant at an electrical level of +20 db., while the frequency is slowly increased from 50 to 6,000 cycles per second by means of a beat-frequency oscillator. The lower trace represents the voltage across terminals of the driving unit of the horn. The decrease of the amplitude above 4,000 cps. is due to the characteristic of the vibrator of the oscillograph and the associated amplifier. The upper trace represents the sound intensity about one foot in front of the mouth of the horn. The microphone was placed close to the loudspeaker so that the sound reflected from the auditorium would not be appreciable as compared to the directly radiated sound.

THIS PARTICULAR horn is a standard 16-A type, which in design really consists of two exponential horns extending in approximately opposite directions from a common bell. The walls are made entirely of thin metal. It is provided with two electrodynamic driving units. It is quite evident that this characteristic leaves much to be desired when compared to the uniform response of electrical equipment.

corded in the upper trace. From 500 to 2,000 cps. are recorded in the middle trace, while the frequencies above 2,000 cps. are found in the lower trace. The three channels have approximately the same gain in the transmitted bands. The electrical input of slowly changing frequencies was the same as that used in Figure 1. No new information is contributed by Figure 2 over Figure 1, but it gives a more graphic representation of the relative strength of the speaker in the three bands.

If the engineer carries his testing of the loudspeaker no further, he is evidently at a loss to estimate quantitatively how much transient distortion this loudspeaker will contribute, as compared with another speaker which has a different characteristic. It follows that some more direct test should be employed to determine the distortion of elementary components of speech. Almost two years ago the writer proposed to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers a method of testing directly for transients introduced by loudspeakers (or other electro-mechanical units [Vol. XVI, No. 3, 1931, pp. 302-314, J. S. M. P. E.]

This method was employed in obtaining the oscillogram shown in Figure 3. It consists of impressing any desired single frequency on the speaker for a short period of time, from 0.03 to 0.3 seconds, to represent the different fundamental components of speech. This pulse or "synthetic syllable" is recorded by the lower trace as it was impressed electrically across the terminals of the driving units of the 16-A type horn. The upper trace is the record of the sound which is emitted by the horn. The low and middle frequency distortion is most undesirable, but that of high frequency is enormous by comparison.

This means that every elementary component of sound is distorted by the "hang-over" as shown in Figure 3. It means that the directly radiated sound will not be clean-cut in spite of the high-frequency response which this speaker has. The speaking voice which is reproduced will appear as if coming from a coupled room next to that occupied by the listener. In other words, the talking image on the screen will lack "intimacy" in scenes where it is required.

THE CAUSE of this transient distortion must be found either in the driving unit, the horn, or the combination. Figure 4, gives the results of a test for "hang-over" with the electro-dynamic unit alone. The horn was removed and the microphone was brought up close to the unit itself. Although some "hang-over" is noticeable, especially in the lower trace, which is 24 db. above the normal level trace, it is negligible by comparison to that contributed by the horn as shown in Figure 3.

These data, as well as much additional data taken over the last two years, indicate that the transient distortion introduced by the horn is due largely to reverberation in the horn cavities, especially in the high-frequency range. It follows at once that the absorption of walls of the horn will be one of the controlling factors in determining the period of reverberation or the amount of "hang-over" of short sounds. At the same time, the intensity of the radiated sound will be raised by the multiple reflection of reverberation, just as it is in a room which is "live." Furthermore, abrupt turns or bends in the horn will increase the reverberation, as compared with a straight horn.

The particular horn just described has a very high reverberation because of the metal walls, which are non-absorbing. It also has rather abrupt bends, which, of course, tend to close the effective opening of the reverberant cavities, in spite of the uniformly increasing cross-section according to the exponential law.

It is hoped that designers and manufacturers of electro-acoustic equipment will employ adequate tests which will directly determine the transient distortion. Response of sustained tones should always be supplemented by a transient test in the improvement and development of each link of the long chain of sound transmission, from the source at the studio, to the ears of those who go to the motion picture theatre to hear as well as see.

DUAL AMPLIFIER

- An amplifier providing two complete independent sound-on-film amplification systems in a single unit has been brought out by the Operadio Manufacturing Company of St. Charles, Ill. Each of the united amplifiers are self-contained, operating on a. c. current. A single switch permits switching from one to the other without interruption of the program. Each amplifier supplies the photoelectric cell voltage, and the exciter lamp current, and operates from the output of any sound head using the caesium type of cell. An adapter unit is also available for use with sound-on-disc, record or public address system reproduction.

Each amplifier uses one 24, two 27s, two 50s, and one 81. Maximum capacity slightly exceeds that necessary for use in theatres of 1,000 seats.

SMALL HOUSE AMPLIFIER

- An amplifier designed especially for use in theatres of up to 780 seats, has been developed by The Radiart Corporation of Cleveland. The amplifier is designed for use with sound heads employing caesium photocells, and the voltage for each cell can be regulated by separate controls so that at changeover no adjustment need be made in volume. The exciter lamp transformer design is such that the same amplifier can be used for either 4-ampere, or 7½-ampere exciter lamps. Tube equipment consists in one 24, one 27, two 47s, and one 80. All controls are on the amplifier, and a rheostat is furnished for maintaining the proper exciter lamp supply. The entire unit measures 20 x 20 x 10¼ inches.

SOUND-ON-FILM SYSTEM

- A new sound-on-film system has been brought out by the Associated Engineering Laboratories of Buffalo, N. Y. This equipment is entirely a. c., operated at either 25 or 60 cycles. The manufacturers claim a frequency response of from 30 to over 8,000 cycles.

A cylindrical disc, which is chromium-plated, is used to guide the film past the optical system. The drive is chain type, with heads adapted to Simplex or Powers projectors.

The system includes an all a. c. amplifier equipped with a voltmeter, master volume control, changeover switch, exciter lamp current control for two projectors, photocell voltage control, pilot lamp, and main a. c. switch.

The whole equipment includes dynamic speakers for both screen and projection room monitoring.

PERFECT PROJECTION: CHEAP AT ANY PRICE

I PROPOSE to talk to exhibitors and theatre managers in the hope that when they read what I have to say, they will give it very careful consideration. I ask that my statements be considered in the light of plain common sense. Fair enough?

I enter into a great many theatres in which projection or reproduction is not what it should be, yet too often find the matter viewed with indifference. The reason is that the audience is thought unable to tell that a fault in the equipment exists. That attitude is baseless. Patrons may not know why, but they know when the sound, for example, is not clear. In the case of an organ, they know that an out-of-tune effect is due to the organ itself, but when reproduced sound is bad, they have no means of knowing whether the recording is bad, or whether the fault lies in the equipment.

I find sound reproduction "out-of-tune" for the reason that the equipment has been permitted to fall into a state a disrepair. I often find much of the projection apparatus in a state of disrepair to an extent little less than deplorable. I find the projectors running with worn parts which not only serve to injure the then-being-projected show, but also working injury to the films and therefore to every show that will thereafter be projected with those films. Yet the theatre manager refuses to permit repairs, however sadly needed, because the repairs would cost money and thus add to the overhead of the theatre!

Injury to sound or image in a single show does some harm, but to get the true effect of such things, one must consider them over an extended period of time—say, six months. Considering picture projection, suppose, for example, that the aperture plates are a bit worn, so that there is an occasional tendency for the image to be out-of-focus. Suppose the intermittant sprocket teeth are somewhat worn, so that the picture is not as steady as it should be on the screen. (We will not consider the serious strain put upon the film sprocket holes by worn intermittent sprockets.) Suppose the intermittent movement is sufficiently worn to set up a tendency toward unsteadiness of the picture! Suppose the projector gearing is sufficiently worn so that either the projectionist must either put a brake on the shutter (thus increasing the gear wear), or have a backlash that will set up travel ghost and thus increase flicker tendency and reduce the precentage of light available for projection!

All this is not at all improbable. In fact, it exists to greater or lesser extent in a large percentage of theatres in this country today.

Suppose, also, that sound volume is too high or too low, or through faults in equipment, there is excessive ground noise, or the sound is "mushy"—and so on, through a rather long list of possible faults. Let us consider the audience reaction to all this, remembering that the deduction I shall draw is true only in lesser degree if the faults be but few and minor.

If Mr., Mrs., and Miss Patron come to this theatre and find everything as it should be, with perfect projection and perfect sound, they are entertained if the picture is to their liking. They are therefore impressed with the motion picture as entertainment. They become that highly desirable thing, regular attendants.

Now the other side! Instead of the above condition, let us examine the audience reaction to the theatre in which faults exist. Let us assume that the same shows are available as in the other theatre, but now the patron finds that the picture is not very steady. The picture strains the eyes. The reason may be bad focus or travel ghost. It may be insufficient current. Perhaps the projectionist does not understand how to get the greatest amount of light through to the screen. Maybe lenses are being used which should have been long since replaced. The patron also finds that the reproduced music is distorted, and that dialogue is hard to understand, or that there is a continual, most annoying crackling coming from the screen.

What is the inevitable result? The patron is not only less entertained than he might be, but he gets the idea that after all the motion picture is still pretty crude. It is all right for those that like their Garbos and Gables, but he can't get much of a "kick" out of anything so falsely set before him. Or he may be able to recognize that the fault is local, and that other theatres "put on" their pictures right. In either case, at least one exhibitor or manager will have a chance to complain about poor business.

If these latter are your conditions Mr. Exhibitor or Mr. Manager, you have no right to complain. You have "saved" on overhead and that is what you wanted to do.

There is only one right way to do things and that is the right way. The wrong way seldom, if ever, wins out in the long run. In the case of out-of-repair or carelessly handled projection and sound equipment, the audience cannot always recognize the fault, but it knows the difference between good entertainment and poor or mediocre entertainment. The theatre which puts on perfect projection, both in sound and image, usually has a pretty good house even when it does not have one of the week's outstanding pictures. As a rule, the theatre that permits its equipment to fall into disrepair does good business only when it has an unusual attraction.

Faulty projection and sound (which includes acoustics) is itself a big item in overhead, and it extends its negative influence as time goes on to many parts of the balance sheet. The good showman will recognize perfect projection as cheap at any price.

ELECTROLYTIC CONDENSERS

J. L. BUCHANNAN of Denver, Col., writes: "Last week a sound engineer spoke of what he called an 'Electrolytic Condenser.' Said it was much better than the old sort, but did not have time, so he said, to tell me just what it is. Will you be good enough to tell me? Things are pretty dull here, but that can't last always."

In the first place, let us consider the action of condensers in general. A condenser stores e. m. f. It therefore stores power, not by chemical action, as in the case of a storage battery, but by what is known as a "charge" of e. m. f., electricity, electrons or however you wish to express it. It differs from the charge set up in a storage battery in that it cannot be stored for any length of time. If used at all for power purposes, it must be in one impulse, the force of which will depend upon the size (capacity) of the condenser, and the voltage with which it is charged. In other words, while the storage battery may be discharged slowly, the condenser may be discharged only in one impulse, except that if let alone, the charge will slowly be absorbed by the idle circuit attached, or by leakage across the condenser terminals.

One peculiarity of the condenser requires explanation of how commercial condensers are made. They consist of strips of tin foil wound upon each other, with insulating material, usually carefully selected paper, between. Each alternate winding is connected to one end of a circuit wire, the remaining windings being connected to the opposite end of the same wire. We then may have windings 1, 3, 5, 7, 9 and so on attached to one wire end, and windings 2, 4, 6, 8, 10 and so on connected to the other end.

Capacitance is the term employed by engineers to express the power or charge any condenser is capable of storing. It is directly dependent upon the surface area of the above described windings, and the thinness of the insulation. The thinner the insulation (providing it be effective), the higher the capacitance of the condenser.

And now as to the electrolytic condenser: Not so long ago some experimenter discovered that if a strip of sheet aluminum be immersed in a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda contained in a tank made of current-carrying material, and the strip be attached to the positive side of a d. c. circuit of suitable voltage, and the tank itself be attached to the negative side of the same circuit, the result would be a deposit of insulating material on the strip, which presently would stop all current flow. It was found that this process was applicable to all commercial voltages under 600, and may in future be applied even to higher voltages. It was also discovered that this insulating film is much thinner than any other practicable insulating material, which operated to increase the capacitance of the condenser. I don't know why extreme thinness acts thus, but it seems that it does. It also made the condensers more compact and decreased their cost, all of which is, of course, good.

It will be seen from the foregoing that when it is desired to construct a condenser by this method for any given voltage, it is only necessary to suspend the strips of aluminum in the bicarbonate bath, charge it with the voltage the condenser is to withstand, or possibly a bit more to provide a factor of safety, and wait until all current flow has stopped. A condenser made from those strips then will be effective on any voltage up to that of the charging current, though it will not be efficient at lower voltages because of the added unnecessary thickness of the insulating film.

However, there are many practical difficulties in making such condensers reliable, therefore they are, as units, rather expensive, although much cheaper than paper and tin foil condensers of equal capacity. Since if polarity be reversed, the insulating film tends to break down, an electrolytic condenser is ordinarily not used in a. c. circuits unless there is also in the current a d. c. polarizing voltage. They are, however, of very great use in d. c. circuits where a high capacity is desired to by-pass effectively alternating currents, as, for example, in filters on charging equipment.

It is possible to make condensers from sheets of metal other than aluminum by using a different solution. Bicarbonate of soda is cheap, however, and aluminum is not very expensive, so that is, and most likely will continue to be, the commercial form of the condenser. The film of insulating material is approximately only one millionth of a millimeter thick.

Another point is that various insulating materials of equal thickness serve to alter the capacitance of the condenser.

BREAKING INTO PROJECTION WORK

I RECEIVE many letters from young men who desire to enter the projection field. Many of them seem to have an idea that those now in had someone to help them. "If only I had some influential friend," or "Can you suggest some way I can get in, as I have no pull or anyone to help me," usually forms a part of such communications.

In reply to these letters I am compelled to say something which does not sound so well, but which nevertheless is a fact. An influential friend may at times be of help, but if you look back over the past you will find that almost every really successful man started out on his own power and built his own road to success.

The road to success, my friends, is not paved. It is filled with ruts and holes. It is strewn with sand, pebbles and rocks. It climbs over great high mountains of effort and dips into valleys of discouragement. But the man who is able and willing to push those rocks aside, climb the hills and toil through the valleys, will succeed. The chap who has to have the rocks shoved out of the way, who finds the sands too resistant, the hills too steep, the valleys too full of shadows, will never get very far along the road to real success, and will never experience the happiness that comes from the successful fighting of hard battles against odds.

Times are hard just now. It would be almost impossible for anyone, no matter how influential, to get any one a job. To him who really wants to get into the theatrical field my advice would be: Get a job of some sort in a theatre, no matter if it be only that of usher. It would probably take plenty of persistence to get even that right now, but the man who has the seed of success in him will overcome difficulties. They will merely serve to urge him on to greater effort. Therefore, I say to you: Get a job, and whatever it may be, start studying. If the job be that of usher, then see to it that you become the best usher to be found anywhere. But that is not enough. You want to get ahead! Therefore start studying everything about the theatre, but particularly study the department to which you hope and expect to be advanced. Don't expect success in a minute, in a week, in a month or in a year. Real success comes slowly. It is accomplished through hard work

The foregoing, of course, sounds discouraging, but it is the best advice I can give. Fight your own battles. If you have in you that spark with which success is kindled, you will find ways to fight these battles, and through that fighting you will be the gainer in the end.

THE ORIGIN OF LENSES

RECENTLY some good brother cited me to an article on early day lenses published in the "Lexicographer's Easy Chair" of The Literary Digest. After some delay I got hold of the article in question, which is so interesting that I am going to publish it verbatim.

> TELESCOPE.—The Lexicographer owes to Mr. William Clarkson, of Detroit, Mich., the following: "You may be interested if I quote from an old book I have: 'Reflections Upon Ancient and Modern Learning,' by William Wotten, B.D., printed in 1694. Chapter XV: 'Of several Instruments invented by the Moderns, which helped to advance Learning':—'The Imperfections of Distance are remedied in a great Measure by Telescopes; whose chief Use, that comes under our Consideration, is to discern the Stars, and other celestial Bodies.
> " 'To find out the first Inventor of these sorts of Glasses, it will be necessary to learn who first found out the Properties of Convex and Concave Glasses in the Refraction of Light. Dr. Plot has collected a great deal concerning F. Bacon, in his Natural History of Oxfordshire; which seems to put it out of doubt that he knew that great Objects might appear little, and small Objects appear great; that distant Objects would seem near, and near Objects seem afar off, by different Applications of Convex and Concave Glasses; upon the Credit of which Authorities, Mr. Molineux (Dioptric, pp. 256-8) attributes the Invention of Spectacles to this learned Friar, the Time to which their earliest use may be traced, agreeing very well with the Time in which he lived; but how far F. Bacon went we know not. So that we must go into Holland for the first Inventors of these excellent Instruments, and there they were first found out by one Zacharias Joannides (Borellus de vero Inventore Telescopii, p. 30), a Spectacle-maker (ibid, p. 35) of Middleburgh in Zealand; in 1590 (ibid, p. 30) he presented a Telescope of Two Glasses to Prince Maurice, and another to Arch-Duke Albert, the former of whom apprehending that they might be of great Use in War, desired him to conceal his Secret. For this Reason, his Name was so little known, that neither Des Cartes (Dioptric) nor Gerhard Vossius (De scientiis Methemat., p. 70) had ever heard any thing of him, when they attributed the Invention of Telescopes to Jacobus Metius of Alkmaer. However, it taking Air, Galileo Galilei took the hint, and made several telescopes, by which making Observations upon heavenly Bodies, he got himself immortal Honor. . . .'
> "I think we can agree it sounds reasonably true that secrecy would be demanded, and its use in warfare predicted, as judging by our own times, our useful inventions are used to benefit mankind, while on the other hand, they are used for mankind's destruction."

There, gentlemen, next time you have optical trouble you have only to "cuss out" some guy who discovered the properties of lenses, way back somewhere in the 1600s. From this article we learn that Holland produced the first optical instruments of excellence. You who use the marvelous lenses of today should be interested.

THE ACADEMY APERTURE SIZES

AFTER MUCH argument, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has approved and recommended a new camera aperture measuring .631 x .868 inches, and for projection an aperture of .600 x .825 inches, the center line of the latter .7380 inches from the control edge.

These aperture sizes have been recommended for immediate adoption. The Paramount Publix Research Division has approved the new projection aperture as satisfactory for the projection of a picture in the 3 x 4 ratio, provided it be photographed through a negative aperture not exceeding the one now approved. The research division, however, makes note of the fact that while this is acceptable, it is of the opinion that a reduction of camera aperture to .623, and a reduction of the projection aperture to .590, would represent the ideal compromise in that it would represent the correction to an 18 per cent projection angle, which is the average angle of Paramount Class A and Class B theatres. This last named "ideal" compromise was the one approved by the practical projection committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which committee, through President Goldsmith, put up a fight for its adoption.

So far as the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences is concerned, this action settles the matter, but nevertheless it cannot as yet be said that these apertures represent the standard, because the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is a body which, through its standards and nomenclature committee, also sets standards for the industry, and that body has as yet taken no action.

It is likely, however, that the action taken will be supported by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and finally adopted as the standard. I believe this for the reason that undoubtedly many, if not all the producers, will adopt the aperture and change their apertures in accordance with these requirements. If this be done, any alteration which might be later accepted by them would have to be based upon very urgent reasons.

And now, let us for a moment step into no-man's-land! In what I shall say I most emphatically deny any intention of criticizing any one. I am just going to talk along the lines of what seems to me to be plain common sense.

This matter of alteration of aperture sizes is important. Its importance has been recognized for quite some while, yet the Society of Motion Picture Engineers took no action looking to the alteration of what was, particularly since sound has arrived, obviously inefficient aperture dimensions. The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, however, did finally step in, set the ball rolling and proceed to do something. That action I, for one, most emphatically approve, but with equal emphasis I must express my disapproval of the methods adopted.

NOTE—DOTTED LINE SHOWS PROJECTOR APERTURE

Projector Aperture Specifications

In the motion picture industry we have two major divisions, both of which would be considerably affected by any change in camera and projector aperture dimensions. I refer to the producers and to the theatres. This being true, it seems to me that before any action was taken, both of these factors should have been consulted. This was not done so far as the theatres are concerned, at least not in any competent way.

What is done, is done, but I am sure it will be an improvement on what we have had in the past. Just what the situation is going to be during the period of change, I am not sure. I am afraid in many instances a goodly number of actors may find themselves decapitated. That, I suppose is to be expected. But let us hope the period of transition will be as short as possible.

AIR CONDITIONS AND SOUND

JOHN GRAMDAL of St. Joseph, Mo., asks, "To settle an argument, will you be good enough to advise as to whether or not conditions inside a theatre —meaning atmospheric conditions—will vary the speed of sound travel? Have had an argument and we are leaving it to you."

At an air temperature of 70 deg., sound travels at approximately 1,120 feet per second. Its speed of movement increases slightly with increases in either humidity or temperature, but does not vary with barometric pressures. I might also add, for the sake of completeness, that the effect on sounds of different frequencies does not vary appreciably. At least such variations as exist may be disregarded for all practical purposes. (This answer is based on information kindly supplied by the engineering department of Erpi.)

Some while ago, in thinking over various problems with respect to the distribution of sound in auditoriums, it occurred to me that since sound is propagated in waves, which spread out in every direction from the source, any other movement of the air itself would affect the sound at least to some extent. I particularly had in mind the effect which might be set up by two fans blowing the air cross-currents. It seemed to me that this must surely have a tendency to distort the sound waves. So reasonable did this appear that I laid the matter before the Bell Laboratories engineers. They now say:

"Your general theme, that air movement, being essentially of the same nature as sound, could cause interference, is correct, but due to the large difference in the velocities of the movements causing sound, and those of ordinary air currents, the effect is actually negligible. Sound in air is propagated at a velocity of 1,100 feet per second, while ordinary air velocities from fans are of the order of only a thousandth of this amount. Movement of air due to ordinary air currents is thus negligible when compared to the rapid motion of sound waves.

"In addition, air motion, to cause sound, must be vibrating—making at least 16 vibrations per second. The motions of ordinary air currents, on the other hand, are more or less steady (any vibrating motion existing is usually at a frequency lower than that necessary to cause sound). Consider, for example, the effect of throwing a stone into a moving stream of water. Ripples will spread out from where the stone entered without being appreciably distorted by the motion of the water, and in this case the velocity of the stream is much more nearly equal to the velocity of the ripples than is that of air currents to sound."

In my communication I had drawn attention to an oscillogram which was the photographic representation of the sound waves caused by uttering a short sentence. This photographic representation was several inches in length. I had assumed that the waves shown would certainly be disturbed by cross currents or movements. The engineer said:

"In the oscillogram you refer to, the little short vertical lines along the horizontal, or time, axis are a hundredth of a second apart. The entire length of the sentence is only a little over 1½ seconds. You will therefore see that the complete vibrations shown have taken place within a very short period of time, during which they may have been carried forward or retarded slightly, but no appreciable distortion would have been introduced by any ordinary fan currents."

I publish this merely as interesting data.

It seems that while there may be some slight distortion set up by air currents in an auditorium, it would be so very little that its effect would not be discernible. However, it may be noted that the engineer said no appreciable distortion would be set up by any ordinary air currents.

SOME DON'TS TO REMEMBER

AT THE END of the Simplex instruction book, the International Projector Corporation has printed a list of 43 "don'ts" that are sufficiently excellent to deserve repetition. Here they are:

1. Don't operate projector with mechanism doors open.

2. Don't start the projector until threading has been checked up.

3. Don't lift the fire shutter when the film is in magazine and lamphouse douser is open.

4. Don't start the projector until the picture is in frame.

5. Don't use force in driving pins or removing shafts.

6. In removing intermittent sprocket be careful not to strike it against sides of mechanism.

7. Don't have too much tension on pad or film guide. This causes undue wear on the star wheel and intermittent sprocket, and may injure the film.

8. Don't let film trap door slam after threading as the film may be thrown off sprocket and ruined when projector starts. Place finger against film trap door and let it close easily.

9. Don't use steel to scrape the emulsion off the film trap and tension springs. Use edges of a coin or piece of copper or other soft metal.

10. Don't force your projector when it seems stiff. It may need oil or an obstruction may have found its way into the working parts.

11. Don't forget to set the shutter after removing the intermittent case from the mechanism.

12. Don't use alcohol, benzine, kerosene or turpentine as a lubricant. Simplex oil is the only lubricant recommended.

13. Don't fail to give mechanism a kerosene bath at least once a month.

14. Don't try to put enough oil into mechanism at one oiling to last a week; use less oil and use it oftener.

15. Don't forget any of the oil holes. They are there for a purpose and every one of them is important. Locate each of them on the instruction plates.

16. Don't fail to oil machine very time before using, particularly the intermittent movement.

17. Don't put vaseline, grease or packing of any kind into the intermittent casing.

18. Don't fail to keep lenses and condensers clean at all times.

19. Don't use a rough cloth or waste to clean optical units. A piece of chamois, linen or soft cloth moistened with ammonia will give the best results, and remove all dirt as well as giving a high polish. Use equal parts of ammonia and water.

20. Don't fail to examine all electrical connections on lamp, rheostat or motor. For any electrical device to be efficient all connections must be firmly tightened.

21. Don't allow water or any dampness to penetrate the rheostat or motor.

22. Don't fail to keep the commutator and brushes on the motor perfectly clean.

23. Don't neglect the arc lamp connections. High amperage eventually chars the asbestos lead nearest the lamp and efficiency requires that a new connection be made every week.

24. Don't use oil or grease on lamp joints or rods. Use a little powdered graphite at the joints.

25. Don't allow carbon dust or other dirt to accumulate in the lamphouse. A small pair of hand bellows will readily blow out all the dust.

26. Don't expect good results with dirty or pitted carbon jaws.

27. Don't remove pins from intermittent sprocket without proper support for sprocket.

28. Don't attempt delicate intermittent repairs without proper tools.

29. Don't adjust take-up tension spring too tightly. Too much tension wears sprockets and damages film.

30. Don't run projector with magazine doors open.

31. Don't allow cold air draught from fan or other sources to blow into lamphouse. Such draught will invariably result in condenser breakage.

32. Don't screw up condenser rings and holder tightly.

33. Don't fail to wash sprocket teeth at least twice a week with stiff bristled tooth brush dipped in kerosene.

34. Don't fail to keep aperture plate clean.

35. Don't fail to close lamphouse douser if film breaks.

36. Don't fail to match "O" marks when replacing gears.

37. Don't fail to remove oil box complete when adjusting intermittent sprocket.

38. Don't fail to keep pad rollers adjusted to two thicknesses of film.

39. Don't bend the intermittent guide open. To do so will cause serious film damage.

40. Don't forget to oil the take-up spindle.

41. Don't fail to oil the pad rollers.

42. Don't fail to see that all pad rollers are turning when machine is in action.

43. Don't fail to keep rollers in upper and lower magazine roller holders clean and well lubricated.

MULTIPLE-TYPE MOTOR-GENERATORS

IN THE PROJECTION of motion pictures, using the arc light source, it is always necessary that the line voltage be reduced to the voltage of the arc. This is true, regardless of the type of arc used. Since all but a very small percentage of theatres have available for power only lines carrying alternating current, it is requisite to best results, that the alternating current be rectified into direct current. Up to this time no apparatus has been found which is capable of performing both of these duties (viewed from the standpoint of generally satisfactory service) as well as does the motor-generator. It is very true that both voltage reduction and rectification from a. c. to d. c. may be accomplished by devices which are cheaper in first cost than a well designed, well built motor-generator set. Still, as I often have said, these devices do not have the length of life under general theatre usage and abuses that well constructed motor-generator sets have, nor are they able to deliver the range that well designed and well constructed motor-generator sets deliver.

I have often said, and again say (while fully realizing the temptation of exhibitors to reduce first costs to a minimum) cost reductions, if carried to the point of inferior equipment substitutes seldom result in any ultimate saving. On the contrary, they usually mean reduction in efficiency of operation, increased cost for repairs, reduction in excellence of results, and finally a reduction in the length of life of the apparatus, all of which will more than overbalance any saving accomplished in first costs.

A motor-generator, as you know, consists of an a. c. motor taking power from the service lines, which motor in turn drives a generator delivering direct current at reduced voltage suitable for best results at the projection arc.

Many years ago some multiple-type motor-generator sets were in use, but the results from them could not be classified as entirely satisfactory, chiefly for the reason that the voltage of the generator was too low to permit the use of sufficient ballast for proper control, and the sets did not have those characteristics necessary to prevent objectionable drop in speed resulting form fluctuations in line voltage or load. At this time also automatic arc feeds were not very highly developed, and this, combined with the weak points in the multiple-type motor-generators then in use, was directly responsible for that type of machine being replaced by a series type, which became very popular until the advent of the reflector-type of light arc source.

When this latter development appeared, engineers—I recall the Roth company in particular—came to the conclusion that a multiple-type generator would be best, at least for the reflector-type lamps.

The first Roth multiple motor-generator set built strictly for projection apparatus was designed to handle two of the new type 25-ampere reflector-type arc lamps, which had just made their appearance in the projection field. The success of this apparatus was so encouraging that a complete line of multiple-type motor-generator sets was produced, ranging in capacity from 20 to 600 amperes. The generators of these sets deliver from 25 to 100 volts. The name coined by Roth—"Actodector"—is derived from "AC-to-DC." The generators of these sets are slightly over-compound-wound.

In this connection, Roth also placed on the market a "double" ballast resistor, consisting in two separate resistances, or rheostats, assembled in one case, to permit economy of space and ease of handling. The Actodetector was given a rigid iron bed plate to provide and maintain alignment in the unit, if properly installed; flexible coupling between the motor and generator shafts; motors designed for close speed regulation; dynamically balanced rotor; motor sleeve bearings machined from phosphor-bronze castings, motor and generator mounted on the bed plate at the factory, generator brush holders made from one solid piece of brass (using four holders), and a commutator of proportions to give the brush a large contact area.

RELATIVE ARC LAMP BRILLIANCY

I HAVE HAD some inquiries as to the relative brilliancy of the ordinary arc and the high intensity arc. The last figures on this, obtained through the courtesy of the National Carbon Company, is as follows:

The ordinary projection arc supplies 160 candle power per sq. mm. of crater floor area. As to the high intensity arc, it supplies the following candle power per sq. mm. of crater opening:

Using 13.6-mm. carbons at 115-120 amperes, 650 to 750 candle power. The same measurement prevails when using the 16-mm. carbon at 145 and 155 amperes, but of course the crater is larger. The reflector-type high intensity light source and 9-mm. carbon, burned at 75-85 amperes, gives 650-750 candle power.

You will thus observe that the candle power per sq. mm. remains unaltered with different sizes of carbons and different amperages, presuming, of course, the carbon to be in all cases burned at, but not above, its rated capacity. Of course the total light-giving power would be much higher with the 16-mm. carbons, because the crater opening would naturally be larger.

I may, however, make note of the fact that the voltage of the high intensity arc is never specified. As a matter of fact, carbon manufacturers refuse to name any specific voltage, for the reason that the high intensity arc may be operated at the same voltage at several different arc lengths. You may have three high intensity arcs varying in length from ⅝-inch to 1⅛-inch, all at 70 volts, depending upon the position of the flame of the two carbons. These three positions would give very different results, both in quality and quantity of light, therefore the mere specification of a set voltage with which to operate the high intensity arc would lead to misleading and highly unsatisfactory results.

MORE SCREEN LIGHT DATA

I HAVE obtained further data on light conditions at the screen, in this case, like others previously reported on, at a Broadway theatre. Here light distribution was the best of any yet found, though it lacked perfection because of the fact that the light beam was not all entering the projection lens.

Beginning at the upper side of the screen, one foot from the left-hand corner, the light measurement was 7 foot-candles direct, and 2 reflected. In the center top it was 7 foot-candles direct and 2.5 reflected. At the right upper corner, it was 7 foot-candles direct, 2.5 reflected. You will observe that the distribution across the screen was perfect. Just what the half-candlepower drop in the reflective power was I cannot say. Possibly that corner of the screen surface may have accumulated a little more dust than the rest.

Dropping down from the center we found, at 6 inches from the left side, a direct reading of 9.5, or 2.5 higher than the upper left-hand corner, with 3.1 reflected light, or 1.1 higher than the upper left-hand corner. Moving over to the center we found 9.0 direct, and 3.0 reflected. Six inches from the right hand side it was 8 and 3. At the lower left-hand corner the reading was 8.4 and 3.0. In the center it was 7.0 and 2.2, and 5.0 and 1.8 at the lower right hand corner. This whole reading indicated a relatively excellent light distribution, but a much lower candlepower than was found on some of the other screens.

I spoke to one of the projectionists concerning the drop at the bottom. His answer was in the nature of a surprise. Said he:

"We are carrying the light a little high because ordinarily there is but little action at the bottom of a picture which is of importance. The faces and other things the audience wants to see most are generally higher up."

Now whether this does or does not represent good practice, it certainly indicates that the projectionist in question uses his brains. He did not stop to dig that answer up. He made it instantly. Evidently that is exactly what he is doing and why he is doing it, and I am by no means prepared to say it is not the right course.

And now another thing: While this theatre is a fairly large one, it is not very deep. I have watched a few of its shows, and while I have not sat for any length of time in its rear balcony seats, I am prepared to say that at least on the main floor there is plenty of screen illumination. I have for a short while sat in its rear balcony seats, and from that extreme point was impressed with the fact that the screen had ample illumination. I firmly believe that no more illumination should be used in any of the theatres than necessary to bring out the essential details of the picture clearly to those in the rear seats.

I may also take time here to add the thought that it is not at all nonsensical to presume that a better, more comfortable viewing situation would be attained by stepping down the illumination, presumably by a properly located iris, when bright scenes are being projected. It not frequently occurs that a very dense scene which the audience must strain their eyes to see the details of, will be followed by something very bright, such as a seascape, and such abrupt changes are unquestionably hard on the eyes of the audience.

ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO F. H. RICHARDSON SHOULD BE ADDRESSED AS FOLLOWS:

F. H. Richardson

The possibility for alterations in light power for scenes of varying density was brought up at a recent meeting of the practical projection committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and I believe deserves very serious consideration.

To get back to our subject, we found that the light coming through the screen perforations amounted to 3/5-foot-candles. Out in the auditorium, with nothing but the reflected light from the screen, the reading was 3/5-foot-candles. At 75 feet from the screen it was four-fifths of one-fifth of a foot-candle, or I might perhaps better say it was a little under one-fifth of a foot-candle.

I still am not able to analyze the meaning of these latter measurements. I am hoping, however, that some of our optical engineers may be able to tell us just what they mean from the audience viewpoint.

All the measurements were made with the projector running, but of course with no film. When we were finished the projector was stopped and the white light was projected to the screen. The reading was 20 foot-candles direct, and 8 foot-candles reflected, which seems to indicate a somewhat heavy shutter loss. In the projector used I found the free diameter of the converging condenser lens to be 7 inches. From the front face of the converging lens, which has a very heavy curvature to the film plane was 14 inches. The working distance of the projection lens was 2 17/32 inches. Its free diameter was 1 7/16 inches. The aperture in use was a Movietone, which is 800/1,000 or 8/10 inch wide.

A POWERFUL SMALL LAMP

THE OTHER day I examined a lamp, the visible parts of which would not be sufficient (so far as metal is concerned) to make the gear wheels of more than one good clock. Yet that same lamp can supply illumination to a screen 20 feet wide, and that illumination is to all human appearances about three times as brilliant as is the illumination supplied by a 1,000-watt Mazda and cinephor condenser system to a screen only 9x12 feet.

It is of the reflector type and is electrically controlled. The carbon arms are about 4 inches long and lack considerable of being half an inch in diameter. The threaded feed rod is close to the right-hand side of the lamphouse. The carbon arms angle up to the left at about something less than 45°. They also angle sharply backward. Immediately under the arc is a curved steel pan to receive droppings from the carbons. The whole lamphouse is a bit more than a foot long by perhaps 10 inches in diameter. The door opens upward. It has a very excellent crater viewing window and an adjustable crater reflector and screen.

THE EQUIPMENT INDEX

A COMPLETE CATALOG OF ARTICLES OF THEATRE EQUIPMENT AND THEIR MANUFACTURERS AND DEALERS, ARRANGED ALPHABETICALLY BY PRODUCT

Accessories for Sound Equipment

ACCESSORIES for music and sound reproducing devices are many and varied. This comparatively new phase of the motion picture business has brought new demands upon the theatre. In the word "theatre" are included the exhibitor and the projectionist. These new phases of theatre operation must be studied, and included in the product necessary to operation of such equipment are: Pick-ups, motors, needle cups and covers, automatic stops, headsets, turntables, volume controls (rheostats), electric filter, amplifiers, (power packs), radio tubes, loud speaker units, speakers (magnetic or electro-dynamic), horns (exponential), rotometers, stroboscopic discs, cabinets and cabinet hardware. A well balanced set is imperative and for such a set there are equipment requirements which cannot be overlooked.

There has also been brought out a rectifying device for use with the exciter lamp on the projector. This device eliminates the use of batteries or rectifiers for supplying D. C. current to the filament of the lamp. It consists of a transformer, chokes and condensers, and uses Argon gas tubes for the rectifying unit.

Accounting Systems

BOOKKEEPING systems taking into consideration specific requirements of the theatre have been developed to care for the operation of motion picture houses. These may be had either in loose leaf form or in solid book form covering an entire year's operation. These systems are designed to cover fully receipts and disbursements, film used, tickets sold, etc., and enable the exhibitor to check with promptness and accuracy his daily, weekly business or the business for the year. Prices range from $1.50 to $3.50.

Acoustical Products and Engineering

PROPER acoustics is today a subject of outstanding importance in motion picture theatres. The introduction of sound films has necessitated the establishment of a more exact standard of acoustics than was necessary when motion picture theatres simply had the acoustical problem involved in orchestral and incidental music, because speech demands a more exact acoustical condition than music. In addition, the use of sound films made possible a range of volume never before possible, and made it necessary as well to reproduce carefully every shade and inflection of the human voice. New types of speakers, special sound screens, etc., add to the problem.

An auditorium that is faulty in acoustical properties is incapable of being used with any degree of satisfaction for sound films. Due also to the limitations of the recording and reproducing apparatus it is essential that the acoustical properties of the theatre in which sound films are reproduced shall aid in the quality of the reproduction rather than introduce added distortion and confusion. The problem of acoustics in auditoriums has been reduced to a science, and proper acoustics may be built into new theatres or provided in existing theatres through a proper study of theatre design and the use of interior finishes which have the qualities that control sound. Extensive research within the past few years has produced types of interior finish which combine the desirable acoustical characteristics with excellent decorative possibilities. These materials have an architectural flexibility of standard at least approximating that of interior finishes.

The problem of acoustics in theatres has resulted in special consideration of them by certain manufacturers who have established special departments, headed by experts, to cooperate with theatre owners and architects in the acoustical treatment of theatre buildings.

Act Announcers

THE prevalence of combination bills in both motion picture and vaudeville theatres gives added significance to the act announcer. Naturally, in new houses these should be installed during construction so that they will harmonize with the interior design. In remodeling, suitable designs may be obtained for the decorative scheme decided upon. Act announcers are either automatically or hand controlled, with the automatic ones controlled remotely or from the stage. The general principle of the act announcer may be successfully used in window display promotion for the announcing of current and forthcoming bills. Such mechanism must be automatically operated.

Adapters, Mazda

THE Mazda lamp adapter is a device for converting a projector using the carbon arc to the use of Mazda projection lamps. It can be installed in any carbon arc housing by fastening it to the lower carbon jaw. It will operate for both pictures and stereoptican slides. The device consists of a bracket, an adjustable arm and reflector located behind the lamp. Prices range from $10 up.

Advertising Films

THEATRE publicity assumes many forms and the alert exhibitor utilizes each at some time or other to suit the occasion. One of the most effective forms is the publicity film, which may be presented as a local news reel, a trailer, a presentation, a leader, a playlet, etc. In some cases as many as ten such films are run, giving the exhibitor advertising for his own business or an income from the charge he makes for thus advertising other businesses.

Advertising Novelties

THE thing to be accomplished through the use of advertising novelties, of one type or another is the chief consideration in their selection. Among the popular novelties, however, which have been used by theatres for stimulating matinee business, building up juvenile performances or bolstering business on week nights are balloons, thermometers on which are imprinted pictures of stars, buttons, badges, pennants, confections, toys, etc. A popular children's matinee stunt can be obtained by giving away a variety of novelty toys. These can be had in boxes containing 100 toys ranging in value from 5c to 15c at a cost of $3.00.

Air Conditioning and Cooling Equipment

AIR CONDITIONING in the theatre has already arrived at a degree of importance making it one of the necessary adjuncts of the modern motion picture theatre. Because in the theatre people are closely associated physically in great numbers, and for the purpose of realizing enjoyment, the atmospheric conditions of the auditorium especially must not be dependent upon the weather or on any other chance factor. Enjoyment of the entertainment is closely connected with comfort, and the popularity of the theatre is of course influenced by its effect upon health.

Air conditioning does not only mean facilities for cooling a theatre during the hot months, but involves distribution of fresh, clean air at proper temperatures and pressures, and without drafts in the breathing zone. This may mean that the system should be capable of functioning in connection with the heating apparatus as well as with the cooling facilities.

Local conditions influence to some extent the kind of an air conditioning system required in any specific theatre. Some could achieve some measure of good air conditions with equipment costing as low as a few thousand dollars. Others require more elaborate apparatus.

Included in equipment designed to provide better air conditions in the auditorium than would be the case were there no artificial means whatever, are simple ventilating systems, by which air from the outside is drawn into the theatre and given circulation through the agency of fans. At the other extreme are systems costing a great deal more which give the theatre operator entire control of the air conditions in his theatre, regardless of the weather or the season of the year.

The cooling method in the more elaborate apparatus requires a refrigeration chamber, in which the air is drawn through water vapor, the water having been cooled by means of a gas compressor, the refrigeration agent being carbon dioxide or other chemical of similar action.

Aisle Lights

AISLE lights should be installed on every sixth chair standard in zigzag fashion along aisle. Lights are placed at sufficient height from floor to properly illuminate same without disturbing reflection to screen or audience. 10-watt lamps are generally used. Practically all theatres today are installing aisle lights as a protection and convenience to patrons. In recent months a number of instances have been noted where aisle lights have been cast as part of the chair standard itself, the practice being carried out in the more elaborate theatres when the chairs are built to certain decorative specifications.

Amplifiers

AMPLIFIERS are electrical devices for increasing the loudness of sound. Technically, they are instruments which increase the electrical energy produced in the pickups. They are used in all motion picture sound systems, public address systems, with non-synchronous devices, etc.

"100% value for any projectionist"

—so says H. J. Schmieder, of Easton, Pa., after examining Nadell's new book, Projecting Sound Pictures. But that's not all. Here are some other comments we have received:

"I consider it the best book of its kind yet published." — *E. B. Olson, Supervisor of Projection, Warner Bros. Theatres.

"There is nothing in the theatre that is better value for money than this book."—*The Bioscope (British).

"Will give the reader a clear understanding of the intricacies of operating sound equipment."—*Film Daily.

"Mr. Nadell proceeds from theory to practice with considerable ease, and combines both elements in an understandable whole." — *International Projectionist.

You too will find this the clear, simple explanation of sound equipment, its operation and repair for which you have been looking. Gives the fundamental principles on which all makes of equipment are based. Explains their use so that you can recognize the nature of any sound trouble, trace it to its cause, diagnose its importance, take the right steps to correct it. Show when and how repairs can be made in a hurry—when replacement of parts is necessary. A real key to better sound projection.

Everything in this book is practical and explained in understandable language. Instead of describing all makes of sound equipment in detail, the author clearly outlines the fundamentals of mechanisms and circuits found in all sound apparatus, and which, when understood, makes easy the location and cure of all sound troubles.

Covers theory and mechanical requirements of sound-on-film and sound-on-disc —projectors, amplifiers, rectifiers, loud speakers, motors, generators — their principles, operation, maintenance
—acoustics
—care of sound equipment and precautions to prevent trouble.
—tracing trouble.

Anchors for Chairs

THESE ARE KNOWN as expansion bolts, theatre seating style. The new improved anchor consists of an especially long tapered fin head bolt, conical cup, lead sleeve, washer and hexagon nut. For best results these should be placed into a hole ½-inch in diameter. It is suggested that one use a 17/32-inch diameter drill to allow for wear. The bolt is set head downward into the hole. A setting tool, which is a hollow piece of rod, is slipped over the bolt against the washer, and when driven with a few blows of a hammer, expands the conical cup which spreads out, increasing the diameter of the head of the bolt to the absolute diameter of the hole and thereby allowing no lead to be driven past the head of the bolt, and at the same time expands the lead sleeve into every crevice in the concrete. This feature makes this new bolt hold more, even though the hold in the concrete has been drilled oversize to make up for drill wear.

These bolts come packed 100 to the box, and are completely assembled with the exception of the nuts which are placed in a separate envelope inside the box. Assembling the bolts in this fashion, without the nuts, saves considerable time in installation by eliminating the necessity of removing the nut from each bolt. After the bolt is securely set in the concrete, the hole in the chair leg, is placed over the bolt and the nuts screwed down tight.

Arc Regulators

AS THE NAME implies the arc regulator regulates the voltage at the arc through automatic feeding as the carbon is consumed and the gap between the carbons increases. The result of this automatic action is a steady light on the screen pronounced superior to that which it is possible to produce by hand. The arc control, as it is frequently called, feeds the carbons in an even manner. This equipment sells for about $125.

Artificial Flowers and Plants

MANY PLACES in the theatre may profitably be made beautiful through the use of art plants and flowers. The lobby, foyer, auditorium walls and organ grill offer excellent places for such use. Many theatres are capitalizing the seasonal rejuvenation it is possible to achieve in the house through the use of plants and flowers. Much progress has been made recently in the manufacture of beautiful art flowers, plants and trees of all kinds. Not only do art plants and flowers provide a natural beauty in the theatre but they may advantageously be used in brightening dark corners and barren spaces.

Banners and Posters (Hand-Painted)

DUE TO IMPROVED workmanship and quality of product theatre advertising by means of hand painted banners has gained renewed vogue in the past few years. Banners in many colors are now available on heavy poster paper, on muslin and in the form that is known as regular paper banners. The usual sizes of these banners are 32 or 36 inches wide by 10 feet. Muslin banners are made in the same width running any length the cost being around 25 cents per foot. The paper and heavy poster banners about 3x10 feet cost about 50 cents each. The banners are painted in oil color and are waterproof. A variety of colors may be included. All banners may be artistically air-brushed at no additional cost.

In addition to the straight lettered banners, illustrated banners are sometimes desired for big attractions. Banners range in cost from 25 cents per foot up.

Batteries

BATTERIES FORM important units of sound reproducers and are generally furnished by the manufacturer with the sound apparatus. Non-synchronous devices do not use them, but synchronous methods must have them in order to eliminate the hum of the alternating current. Any standard make of batteries can be used, but it is always best to use the make furnished or recommended by the manufacturer of the sound apparatus.

Another important use of batteries in motion picture theatres is in emergency lighting systems which augment the regular source of light power as a safeguard against breakdown of the local system. They are installed for instant service upon such a breakdown, being placed in operation automatically. Besides giving the necessary power for lighting, they are capable also of affording the projector motors power for some time. Prices depend on the nature of the installation.

Bell and Buzzer Signal Systems

PERFECT CONTINUITY of the performance depends upon bell, buzzers and signal systems. The projection room and the stage and the managers office keep in constant touch with each other by various systems of signaling, and only by these means can coordination exist. The ushers have means of signaling the doorman or director as to which part of the house to send patrons, and the ushers are informed by a seat indicating device where and how many seats are empty or filled.

WITH THE GROWTH of the motion picture theatre, and the in-

Low cost Protection against Sound Failure

Dual Amplifiers eliminate shutdowns from Sound Failure and solve theatre service problems

Features of the Model 64

1 Two complete independent amplifiers with control facilities for instant changeover from one amplifier to the other absolutely eliminate shut-down caused by tube or amplifier failures.
2 Two type '50 tubes in the output of each amplifier provide full 15 watts output—ample reserve power.
3 One compact, all A.C. operated unit contains everything between sound head and stage speakers.
4 Ideal tone quality for theatre reproduction. Extended high frequency response makes voice crisper and easier to understand.
5 Can be used with your present sound heads (caesium cells) and stage speakers. The Model 64 will then provide power for p.e. cell and exciter lamp, and eliminate all batteries.

Operadio Model 64 Dual Theatre Amplifier with tube covers removed to show location of two amplifiers. Patent Pending.

Now theatre owners no longer need tolerate the ever-present hazard of a "dark house" due to failure of sound equipment.

The Operadio Model 64 Dual Amplifier protects your profits and prestige against sound failure better than the best insurance policy ever written.

Not only does the revolutionary Operadio Dual Amplifier feature eliminate shutdowns from tube or amplifier failures, but it makes possible such rapid location of any fault in the sound system that programs need never be disrupted.

The cost of this operation insurance provided by the Operadio Model 64 Amplifier is so small compared with the risk of loss of profits that theatre owners everywhere are taking advantage of it. A single shutdown may cost you more than a complete Operadio Dual Amplifier.

Whether you are first installing sound, changing from disc to sound-on-film, or have been tolerating uncertain sound operation—you can save money by investigating the Operadio Model 64 Amplifier. Write or wire your motion picture supply house or the Operadio factory for complete details.

Bronze and Iron Work, Ornamental

THE THEATRE today cannot be shoddy in appearance. Everything visible to the eye of the patron must be colorful and artistic—the organ grilles, all metal work on doors, railings, wickets, metal accoutrements in men's smoking rooms and women's rest rooms, etc. This bronze and iron work may be artistic in its plainness, or in the elaborateness of its design and mould, or again in the severity of the modernistic tone. Grilles can be made in any design or size, and one can also obtain bronze ticket booths and lobby frames.

Bulletin Boards, Changeable

CHANGEABLE BULLETIN boards, which come under this heading involve the use of a grooved board on which are placed white enameled brass letters, white enameled die cast aluminum letters or white or red celluloid letters of various sizes as may be desired to work out an attractive announcement. The background of the board is usually covered with a dark broadcloth surrounded by a frame in mahogany or extruded cast bronze. The letters are hung in the horizontal grooves of the board and the announcement accomplished through placing of the letters in their most advantageous manner. These changeable bulletin boards are made in various sizes ranging from 10 inches by 6 inches to large boards.

Many theatres have adopted signs of this type for use in the lobby in announcing coming and present attractions. In fact the ease with which announcements may be set up or changed gives these bulletin boards a wide range of use in the motion picture house.

Also used on bulletin boards, but particularly adapted also for marquise signs, to announce the current attraction, are letters of raised opal glass mounts in oxidized finished metal frames and illuminated from the inside by electric lamps.

Cable, Motion Picture

MOTION PICTURE cable and other asbestos insulated wires occupy an important place in theatres, being extensively used in the projection room for the projectors, for spot and flood lights, switchboards, motor and grid resistance leads and the like. The two important features of motion picture cable are flexibility and immunity to flame and heat. Owing to the intense heat and possible danger from fire in projection booths the conductor must have the finest kind of insulation. Because of the necessity for constant changes of position for floods and arcs the cable must be very flexible and tough enough to endure wear.

Canopies, Theatre

USE OF ARTISTIC canopies by motion picture theatres is growing in popularity among houses of all sizes. A canopy serves a number of practical purposes. They offer theatres an excellent advertising medium while giving to the house an attractive and inviting entrance. During inclement weather they offer protection to waiting patrons.

Canopies are usually constructed of sheet metal and may be obtained in a variety of designs. They are furnished with glass roof or with steel ceiling and metal roof. Numerous interesting standard designs have been developed by marquee manufacturers especially for theatre use. These are easily installed and are shipped to theatres in convenient sections. Suggestions for attractive designs are available. Inquiries should be accompanied by approximate measurements of the front of the building where the canopy is to be used.

Not only are practically all of the new theatres being erected installing marquees but they are being exclusively used in the remodeling of the old houses, because of the effective manner in which they give to the theatres a new and pleasing appearance at small cost.

Carbons

MOTION PICTURE projection carbons might possibly be considered one of the most staple products in the operation of the moving picture theatre.

There is no factor, indeed, which can claim any more attention in the successful operation of the theatre than the light which is used for projection, and quite a little depends on both the quantity and quality of projector carbons kept on hand in the projection booth.

Modern projection demands the best in quality in projection carbons today, and this demand is being met by the carbon manufacturers through their scientific and research departments with products that have kept pace with modern progress.

Carpets

BECAUSE of the hard wear to which theatre carpets are subjected it has been found that there is no saving in the selection of cheap carpets. The heavier and deeper the nap the more life may be expected of a carpet. Generally, floor coverings and carpets should be of a nature that rest on the floor and give the impression of stability and foundation upon which one may walk with security. A carpet that is fuzzy, light in color and overdecorated has a tendency to give the impression that it is not resting—but rather floating. Obviously this is an unfavorable impression. Carpet padding used under the carpet not only provides a softer and more comfortable feeling to the foot but reduces friction and adds many years to the life of the carpet by keeping it away from direct contact with the hard floor.

Carpets also should be selected with a view to the acoustics of the theatre.

Carpet Cushioning

IN THEATRES, where continuous coming and going of patrons subjects the carpets in aisles, stairs and foyers to unusual wear a cushioning under the carpets has been found to add many years to their life. In addition to this practical advantage carpet cushioning gives a delightful sensation of richness and luxury which is important in creating a desirable atmosphere in the theatre. Carpet cushioning is a product made of finely combed, tufted vegetable fibre interlaced through a burlap backing or of animal hair felted under pressure. It is made in thicknesses varying from ¼ to ¾ of an inch. Carpet cushioning also has a bearing upon acoustics.

Chairs, Theatre

TO EQUIP a theatre properly, the first requirement is a thorough understanding of the uses to which the building is to be put. Having determined that, a seating diagram or layout should be made to insure the maximum seating capacity consistent with comfort, safety, facility of entrance and exit, compliance with local or state building requirements, proper sight lines, elevations and other mechanical adaptations and adjustments.

The arrangement and width of aisles and passageways should be such that transient patrons may move about with a minimum of disturbance to those who are seated. For this reason, the number of seats in each row between aisles should be kept as low as is possible and consistent with the desired seating capacity. It is well to have not more than ten or twelve seats in a row between each aisle, although this number may, if necessary, be increased slightly. Many theatres, however, have established a maximum of fourteen seats.

The distance between rows varies between 30 and 32 inches. Experience has demonstrated that this distance is necessary to accommodate all sizes of patrons, and to facilitate entering and leaving the center seats of a row while others are seated.

In planning the seats for a theatre, it is a safe policy to plan for the accommodation of persons who are above the average in size, since seating that is too large does not produce discomfort. In the larger theatres, therefore the majority of the seats are 20 inches wide with an occasional 19-inch chair to fill in. An exception to this ruling is the seating for loges, which frequently is as much as 24 inches wide.

Every patron is entitled to a direct and open vision of the stage. Sloping and terracing of floor and the curvatures of the balcony are, of course, intended to facilitate this, but unless the seats are specially made to meet the requirements of each and every part of the house, these avail but little. For so greatly do theatres vary in plan and design that the seating construction problem must be solved individually in each instance.

The relative length of chair legs, both front and back, must be so adjusted as to conform evenly to the slope of the floor and still keep the chair in its normal position. Then the occupant is assured of a natural, easy and comfortable position in sitting. He is neither tilted too far forward nor too far back. His feet and those of the chair should rest very naturally in exactly the same line or plane.

Where there are sloping sides toward the center, a two-fold problem presents itself. Not only must the inclination toward the front be right, but there must be a mechanical adjustment in the fastening of the seats to standards, so that the seats will be perfectly level and parallel with the natural floor level and the sitter will not be tilted at an angle.

The necessary converging of seats from the outer circumference toward the stage, both on the main floor and in the balconies, is another problem. There must be no loss of chair space and resultant decreased capacity, but the symmetry and a general pleasing and orderly appearance must be preserved.

The placing of chairs in rows and the arrangement of the aisles, to make ingress and egress as easy, speedy and safe as possible and to conform in every way with the building and fire ordinance of each community, is another important point requiring careful thought and planning.

Frequently, a very simple rearrangement makes possible an appreciable increase in house capacity, and if not in actual increased numerical capacity, actual increased box office receipts by transforming otherwise less desirable and less valuable seats to a higher grade of valuation and desirability.

Almost equally as important as proper arrangement of the chairs themselves, is the quality, comfort and service they will give. The element of comfort is an especially outstanding consideration as the ability to provide rest and ease for the audience during the performance augurs for more solid enjoyment of the show. Roominess, correct springs, smooth, well upholstered back, correctly placed arm rests, a perfectly level placing with the floor, serviceable hat holders, smoothly operating and noiseless seat-hinges—these are but a few of the things that go to make up a comfortable theatre chair.

Strength, stability, durability must be embodied in every chair. A broken seat, while apparently not of great importance in itself, is nevertheless an annoyance that reflects unfavorably on the theatre as a whole.

Talking pictures have injected another element into the problem of seating for higher efficiency, i. e., acoustics. The acoustical properties of the theatre chair are now very important, and for sound-equipped houses upholstered seats have become a necessity due to their sound-absorbent quality. Veneer backs and seats are likely to induce sound reverberation of obnoxious character and may easily mar an otherwise perfect acoustical condition. Therefore, in the selection of seating facilities, the subject of acoustics must now be given most serious consideration.

Chair Covers

IN ADDITION to giving a pleasing and inviting appearance to the auditorium, chair covers serve the practical purpose of coolness and sanitation. An interior otherwise drab may be transformed into a cool, clean, cheerful looking place through their use.

Theatre chair covers have been used extensively in dramatic and larger motion picture houses but it is only recently that by the smaller houses. No doubt one of the causes has been the belief that they were an expensive proposition. This however, is not the case. Recently chair covers have been developed which are reversible, effecting an important saving in laundering costs. There are several things that should be borne in mind in connection with the use of chair covers. It should be remembered that auditorium and balcony chairs as a rule require two distinct and different styles of covers. The auditorium chair should be equipped with a cover which covers the entire chair back while the balcony chair need only have a quarter back. This is because of the slope on which balcony chairs are placed.

Working from blue prints provides the most satisfactory way of assuring a perfect fit of the cover for each chair.

Chair pads for veneer seats are also obtainable, and there are also special chair materials which are intended to be used as aids to acoustics.

Chair Fastening Cement

CEMENT of this kind is for firmly attaching into the floor the metal pieces to which the theatre chair is bolted. Into a hole made in the floor, the metal piece itself, or bolt for its attachment, is inserted, then around it is poured the melted cement. In about ten minutes this cement hardens and holds the metal piece or bolt firmly in place.

When used in reseating, the old metal piece or bolt is removed, a new one inserted and the cement poured around it. Such cement can be procured for around $7.50 per 12-pound can.

Chairs, Folding

THE FOLDING CHAIR, solidly constructed, plays an important role in the theatre today. With presentation and the stagehand, and the need for compactness behind the scenes, the folding chair serves manifold purposes. The durability of this type of chair as made today adds to its value as a stage requisite. Many very small theatres likewise find the folding chair suitable owing to the frequent necessity of clearing the auditorium floor for other forms of entertainment. The folding chair combines neatness, durability and practicability.

Change Makers

SPEED AND ACCURACY are obtained at the box office through the use of coin changing machines which in addition to their time saving facilities offer a valuable protection against annoying mistakes in making change to patrons. With the coin changing machines a light touch at the keyboard is all that is necessary to deliver the correct number of coins to the patron who easily scoops them up from a cup at the side of the change maker. Coins may be delivered either from the right or left side and these automatic cashiers as developed for theatres have been improved in recent months until now they are available in sizes which occupy only about 81 square inches of space in the box office.

In the handling of crowds the coin changer plays a particularly important part in reducing to a minimum delay at the ticket window, and some are equipped with safety locks to prevent short changing when a channel is empty. Fumbling of coins and the dropping of them which is characteristic of the old fashioned method is eliminated.

Changeable Sign Letters

CHANGEABLE SIGN LETTERS are widely used by theatres in the marquee and have proved especially popular, because of the flexible manner in which they permit billing of a current or coming attraction. Changeable sign letters are generally made of cast aluminum with the letter part cut out. When used on the marquee these letters can be moved to make an attractive announcement. They are obtainable in large and small sizes and, in addition, numerals of the same character are also available.

Cleaning Compounds

THEATRE REMODELING and rejuvenation go hand in hand with a general clean-up, to which houses are periodically subjected. In this connection cleaning compounds are available for use, not only for the exterior of the house, but for cleaning painted surfaces, marble, tile, terrazzo and mosaic. These latter materials, much in use in theatre buildings, may be brought back to a pleasing state of newness through the use of proper detergents.

Color Films

THERE HAVE been motion pictures in color for a number of years, but in 1929 was made the first feature picture entirely in color. This proved an added touch of realism to the sound picture, and at once color was incorporated in the production plans of most producers.

Most professional productions on standard film employ the process known as technicolor, a patented method consisting fundamentally in filtering out the blues, greens and reds in recording and superimposing them properly in printing. There are other processes less extensively used, including a two-color additive method.

A new process for amateur and semiprofessional work was brought out in 1929 by the Eastman Kodak laboratories. Motion pictures in full natural colors in the 16-mm. size may be made by the use of Kodacolor film and by the addition of a Kodacolor filter to the lens hood of the camera. Provided the light is adequate, the process is no more difficult than making black and white pictures, and projection is accomplished simply by adding a Kodacolor filter to the projector. Minute lenses embossed right on the film cause the colors to register separately and thus do the trick. Since duplicates can not be made from Kodacolor film, the process is still impractical for theatre productions.

Color Hoods

ARTISTIC COLOR effects on electric signs are possible by the use of color hoods which are available in six colors: ruby, blue, green, amber, opal and canary. The color hoods are made of fadeless glass and are made to fit any standard size lamp where they are held in place by spring fasteners, and are readily taken off and replaced for cleaning.

In connection with sign flashers color hoods are an important feature in achieving life and color to make an attention compelling display.

Composition Flooring

MANY PARTS of a theatre especially call for a floor covering other than woven materials, and often composition flooring may adequately take the place of expensive tiles, terrazzo, etc. Indeed, in some of the most elegant theatres, the new types of composition flooring, which is now made in raised sections and patterns suggestive of tile and other kinds of mineral flooring, have been effectively adopted.

Composition flooring is made by a number of companies specializing in this product, and all have their own processes. It may be said, however, that the basic materials are cork or rubber, and natural gums. For the coloring is added color pigments according to the design. The resulting mass is attached to burlap backing. Composition flooring comes in varying thicknesses, depending on the use to which it is to be put, and it may be especially designed.

Condensers

CONDENSERS are single glass lenses, unmounted. They are made in various diameters from 2¼ inches to 8 inches in diameter; the 4½ inches diameter and the 8 inches diameter being used mostly in motion picture work. The condenser is located in the front end of the lamphouse to gather the rays of light from the light source, and bend them, or condense them into a spot of light on the aperture. They are made in different shapes, some being Plano Convex some Meniscus or Moon shape and others Bi-Convex.

Condenser breakage and trouble has been greatly reduced through the perfection and development of heat resisting glass which is tempered and processed to withstand extreme changes of temperature. This, it is declared, has been accomplished without any sacrifice of light on the screen and without impairment of photographic values.

Focal lengths for motion picture work are usually 6½-7½-8½ and 9½ inches; 5 inches, 6 inches and 8 inches diameter condensers are usually used for spotlight projection.

Within the last two years there has been a development of what is known as the Parabolic condenser, which has made possible the gathering of more light, and a sharp, concentrated spot on the aperture of the picture machine. These Parabolic condensers have been developed for regular arc projection, high intensity arc projection, and mazda projection. They are a little more expensive than the regular type of condenser, but the results obtained are well worth the price. Prices from $1.50 to $12.

Cooling, Ventilating Systems

CAPABLE of delivering 35,000 cubic feet of fresh air per minute into every part of the theatre, cooling and ventilating systems are being adopted by theatres of all sizes. Systems of this type are reasonably priced, ranging in cost from $100 upward.

They may be installed in various parts of the theatre, a common place being below the stage. Under this arrangement distribution of the air is upward, the air passing to the rear of the auditorium and dropping naturally to every seat. In theatres having an organ installed at one side of the proscenium the opposite side of the proscenium affords a good place for a cooling unit. A pent house on the roof at the rear of the auditorium, or on an elevated platform eight or nine feet above the stage floor level, are other manners in which the system may be installed to assure excellent results. In fact, regardless of the nature of the theatre, cooling and ventilating systems of this type may be readily adapted to it.

Manufacturers of this equipment maintain cooling and ventilating experts and offer a service of recommending the most efficient arrangement for the complete cooling and ventilating of a theatre. The systems may be installed without interruption to the regular performances.

Curtain Control Machines

FEW THINGS leave a finer impression on the theatre audience than the smooth and silent opening and closing of the curtain. This is accomplished by curtain control machines which operate automatically. The curtain can be controlled from the booth or from back stage by the simple process of pressing a button.

Curtain control equipment consists of track equipped with cable and snaps to which the curtain is fastened. In opening and closing the curtain may be stopped at any desired point across the stage and may also be reversed at will.

The motor for operating the curtain is usually placed on the stage or it may be placed in the grids or mounted on a platform. This permits the machine, track and curtains to be flied in addition to open from the center.

Theatres of all sizes are now employing automatic curtain control equipment and mechanism of this type has been developed to a high grade of efficiency, contributing immeasurably to audience enjoyment of the program. The price of curtain control machines is around $225 with the track selling at $3 per foot.

A type of curtain control machine specially designed for small theatres with tracks up to 40 feet in length, has been put on the market at a price considerably lower than that of the larger machines.

Curtain Tracks

THE TYPE OF curtain track installed is important for several reasons. It cannot be a makeshift affair, for if it is it may ruin an otherwise good program. Naturally, it must be noiseless and must function smoothly and with little or no effort. A moving curtain attracts attention, therefore that motion must not be accompanied by vibration.

Decorating Products and Service

THE THEATRE to-day has opened a new field for the producer and designer of decorative materials. No other building is as complete in this sense as is the theatre, for in the decorative scheme the theatre has found a factor which encourages patronage. The blending colors, the unique wall designs, the finely cut or moulded grille pieces, modern lighting fixture designs, gorgeous drapes, etc., all lend themselves to the theatre.

Dimmers

THE BEAUTIFUL lighting effects achieved in motion picture theatres is accomplished through dimmers which are capable of complete illumination control making possible soft changes and color blending of lights to create a restful and pleasing atmosphere. Dimmers are used by small theatres as well as the large motion picture palaces. They are usually placed at the side of the stage. In instances of smaller installations the dimmer may be operated by the projectionist from the booth.

The magical effect of lighting control and blending as achieved with dimmers is one of the outstanding features of the modern theatre today. On the stage and throughout the theatre dimmers give producers and managers one of their most effective means of creating marvelous effects which unquestionably are important factors at the box office.

Disinfectants, Perfumed

THE NECESSITY of eliminating disagreeable odors in a theatre has led to the development of disinfectants which not only serve to eradicate the odors but leave in the room a delightful perfume fragrance. Disinfectants of this kind are usually sprinkled about the house or they may be used in ornamental cones, placed on the auditorium walls. Particularly during the hot weather months are perfumed disinfectants used extensively to sweeten the air in the theatre and make it agreeable and comfortable. Disinfectants sell for $3.00 a quart and up.

A deodorant which acts as a solvent for the scale forming in urinals and toilets, is also obtainable. It is designed to remove a principal cause of bad odor. Another deodorizing preparation on the market is especially adapted to use in mopping or scrubbing toilet rooms or other places which may be a source of obnoxious smells.

Drinking Cups, Paper

THE PAPER drinking cup, in its handy container, is an adjunct to the sanitary equipment of a theatre. Paper cups range in price from $13.50 for cases of 10,000, to $9.50 for cases of 2,500, depending upon the product purchased. In some instances containers are included in the cost of the cups. Where it is necessary to buy a container, the price will range from $4.50 up.

Drinking Fountains

EIGHTEEN drinking fountains about evenly divided between the wall and pedestal type are installed in Balaban & Katz's Uptown theatre, Chicago. While the Uptown is one of the country's largest houses, the drinking water facilities provided easily emphasize the importance of this feature in any theatre.

Drinking fountains should be placed as conveniently as possible for the patron entering and leaving the theatre. In small houses at either end of foyer is a place frequently used. Whether the wall or pedestal type fountain is used depends upon space available, the wall type being used where space conditions are more limited. The wall type is designed with special decorative and illuminating features.

In the finer theatres drinking fountains form an integral part of the decorative scheme of the theatre, being designed in harmony with the balance of the surroundings and in conformity with the architectural treatment of the house.

Earphones

EARPHONES consist of sound receivers attached to head bands and means for connection of the receivers to the main sound system of a theatre so that persons who are hard of hearing may hear the sounds of the picture as well as a normal person. These systems for the hard-of-hearing have made the talking picture as much of a source of entertainment to the person with impaired hearing as the silent picture was before, and through the device, the partially deaf person has been retained as a patron of the motion picture theatre.

The usual method is to have certain seats adapted for the attachment of this special equipment, and upon request the earphones are plugged into a seat, while the patron has control through a small hand "fader" of the volume.

Effect Machines

EFFECT MACHINES are an integral part of motion picture exhibition, especially when a policy of stageshows has been adopted. The effects in lighting which may be obtained are almost phenomenal, are always a source of curiosity and pleasure on the part of the public. There is a wide range of prices on these machines, depending upon the effects desired. There is also a new product which not only produces the usual effect but a wide variety of others.

Electric Measuring Instruments

THE DEVELOPMENT and improvement in theatre lighting and projection have thrown onto the shoulders of the electrician, as well as the projectionist, many responsibilities. At their command are factors which make or break the show. With enormous switchboards to control, emergency lighting plants, motors, generators, arcs, dimmers, transverters, magnetic appliances and many other involved and sensitive electrical instruments, it devolves on the theatre to provide adequate equipment for their correct operation. In the list of necessary measuring instruments are ammeters, voltmeters, vacuum tube testers and the like. All these and others tend toward improving lighting.

Electric Fans

THIS TERM is used to designate fans ranging in size from 5 to 16 inches, which are usually portable and are made in both oscillating and non-oscillating types. They are operated by connection to the light socket. Prices range from $5 to $35. Ceiling fans are also often desirable in theatres not well equipped for good ventilation.

Electric Flowers

BASKETS OR VASES of electric flowers offer many possibilities in a decorative way for theatres. Artificial roses, tulips, or similar flowers are fitted with small properly colored bulbs and the complete bouquet is wired ready to attach to the light socket. Many a nook or corner now barren and unattractive or unsightly can be transformed into a beauty spot by means of an electric bouquet.

Electric Pickups

ELECTRIC PICKUPS take the sound vibrations from records, transmit them to the amplifiers. The stylus (or needle) runs in a groove on the record and is caused to vibrate according to the groove made at the recording. On the phonograph this needle vibrates a diaphragm located in the neck of the horn, and these vibrations are amplified to audibility by the construction of the horn. Electric pickups are used to convert the mechanical energy picked up from the record by the stylus, which also is the armature of the reproducing unit. A fluctuating audio-frequency voltage is generated in the coil surrounding this armature, which is amplified either through the audio-amplifier (of the radio set) or through the amplifier of a public address or sound picture system.

Engineering Service

THE ADVENT of sound pictures, with all the attendant problems and requirements has necessitated a special kind of engineering service. Men engaged in such works are usually known as consulting engineers and are qualified to act in an advisory capacity on electrical and acoustical problems as well as to supervise sound installations and operation.

Equipment Supplies

THE IMPORTANCE of equipment to the theatre cannot be stressed too much. It makes for comfort, proper presentation of entertainment, safety, etc. Equipment must be given first consideration, for a theatre which does not install the finest and most effective product, and become at the outset attractive and efficient, is endangering its future success. Independent equipment dealers will be found in all key centers. (See complete list of Theatre Supply Dealers.)

Exit Light Signs

EXIT LIGHT SIGNS are required by law in all theatres, the Chicago theatre building ordinance specifying them as follows: "The word 'EXIT' shall appear in letters at least six inches high over the opening of every means of egress from a theatre and a red light shall be kept burning over such a sign."

Many improvements have been made in the manufacture of exit lights in an endeavor to make them less offensive in appearance without detracting from their practical mission. In addition to various styles, exit lights may be obtained built into ornamental fixtures, the whole being placed over the exit door.

Fans, Electric

Refer to ELECTRIC FANS

Fans, Ventilating

FANS MAY BE divided into two classes, the portable and the stationary. The latter is the type commonly used in theatres. It is made in a variety of styles and sizes and is used for drawing into the auditorium fresh air or drawing out the foul air. These fans are mounted in a wall opening and in theatres can advantageously be placed in the front or rear of the auditorium and in the lobby. The motors operating these fans are usually supported by a bracket extension of the fan. The motor is generally enclosed to prevent trouble from dust or dirt.

The sizes of these fans range from 10 to 72 inches in diameter.

Ceiling fans are of a larger type and operate at slower speed. Fans of this type usually have four wooden blades and they are hung from the ceiling by an insulated hanger. The blower type of fan may be located over exits, under stage, at sides of projection booth and on roofs, either at front or rear.

While the importance of adequate ventilation in the auditorium is generally recognized it has been found that many theatres have failed in providing ventilation in lobbies. Air in the lobby, particularly when crowds are waiting admission soon becomes stagnant and foul, with the result that patrons are unduly wearied and placed in an unfavorable state for enjoying the entertainment.

Film Cabinets

THERE ARE various types of film cabinets having storage capacity from three to twelve reels per unit of various forms of construction so that the reel is elevated or brought within grasp by the opening of the cover. They are generally of double metal wall construction, so that should one reel become ignited in the cabinet, the others are insulated from this heat, and thus saved from any damage. Some of them are constructed so that they can be ventilated to the outside by means of piping. The prices range from $4.00 to $60.00 per unit or cabinet.

Fire Prevention for Projectors

IMPORTANT equipment has been developed which it is said definitely prevents a film fire in the projection machine. This equipment is a safety control device, that is easily installed and which is operated on the regular line voltage. The main control unit and dowser are mounted on the cone of the lamphouse and act as the main light cut off, taking the place of the regular dowser. The dowser is operated from five distinct points of contact, covering every avenue through which a fire could start in the projector while it is in operation or at a standstill with the film in it. All contact points are very sensitive, and the dowser is instantaneous in its action, yet does not depend upon springs to actuate it.

An arm with a loop and idler are so mounted as to engage with the upper film loop, another arm and idler are so mounted to engage the lower loop, an auxiliary idler is mounted so that it rides the film between the take-up sprocket and lower magazine valve rollers. These three points of contact with the film offer protection against fire from the following causes: film break at any point in the projector; loss of lower loop; loss of upper loop; mutilated perforations, i. e.: perforations in such condition that film will not ride properly through projector; failure of film to pass properly through projector from any cause; failure of film to take-up properly; bad reel in lower magazine; take-up belt breaking.

Now there are other avenues by which a film fire can start, and the inventors of the device have apparently overlooked nothing in the way of safety.

The entire projector is protected by a governor which is driven by one of the gears of the projector head, and this causes the dowser to actuate in case the following occurs: drive belts breaking, projector head binding up, motor trouble of any kind, loose drive pulleys, line fuses blowing out, projector running below normal speed.

A very important feature of this control is the change-over, this is incorporated in it where two or more projectors are used, and it is very simple in its operation as it keeps one dowser in a locked position while the other one is in operating position.

The failure of current supply to motor results in instant actuation of the dowser.

Fireproof Doors

IN PRACTICALLY all states, cities and towns building codes require the use of fireproof doors in certain quarters of the theatre, such as the projection booth, stairwells, exits, dressing rooms, boiler rooms, etc. This demand on the part of the framers of the building codes has been beneficial to the theatre owner in many respects. In the first place it has effected a big saving in insurance. Secondly, and more important, it has safeguarded life and eliminated legal battles and accident and death claims. Before building every theatre owner should consult building code specialists and the fire underwriters.

Fireproof Shutters

AGAIN ENTERING into lower insurance rates are fireproof shutters for the projection booth. Such equipment in the modern theatre has placed the patrons beyond the danger line, so to speak. These safety shutters are so constructed that they drop when film breaks. Certain designs work automatically, while others operate through a release effected by the projectionist. The list price of the shutters range from $9.00 up, depending on size.

Fireproof Units

THERE ARE various forms of these available and generally each type is made in several capacities and sizes to accommodate their installation in small or large booths. The component parts of each unit are generally detachable so that the unit can be made complete for film storage, waste disposal, film rewinding and inspection, as well as the storage of both supplies and tools. They are generally furnished with casters, so that they can be moved about for cleaning or relocating purposes. They are made entirely of metal and are, therefore, fireproof. These units are far cheaper in the long run than the general makeshift of the past, in covering wooden benches or shelves with tin or sheet metal, since they always represent a recognized value by being complete within themselves, and not built in as part of the partitions or the booth construction. The prices range from $50.00 to $350.00.

E. E. Fulton Company, 1018 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Fireproofing Materials

INTO EVERY FACTOR of theatre construction, there should enter fire resisting material. Through such construction, the exhibitor is safeguarding his investment and his clientele. Fireproofing compounds have been prepared for coating scenery, drapes and curtains and other inflammable materials. Today through the use of specially prepared wood, compounds, asbestos, cement, steel and other fire resisting material the owner may feel assured of the safety of his building.

Flashers, Signs

THE SPARKLING life and motion characteristic of so many theatre signs is produced by the use of sign flashers. Sign flashers are made in several types, among them being the motor driven, the mercury contact, thermal and socket flasher type.

The possibilities for attention getting effects through the use of sign flashers is demonstrated daily in thousands of signs equipped with them. Signs employing flashers are generally used in connection with colored lamps or color hoods, the combined flasher and color lending itself to an almost endless interpretation of interesting figures and shapes.

In addition to the interest compelling action which the sign flasher injects in a sign, it is stated that its use effects a saving in current cost over the continuous burning sign. Prices range from $40.00 up.

Flood Lights

FLOOD LIGHTING is accomplished with a lamp equipped with reflector of parabolic form capable of projecting a light to cover a wide area at a distance. For night lighting of theatre buildings lamps usually range from 200 to 1,500 watts. These may be located on the marquise or at some other vantage point opposite or nearly opposite the building. The intensity of the light is governed to a great extent by the type of reflector employed. In general, there are three types: the extensive, the distributing and the concentrating. The former gives a wide smooth distribution of light for close-up work; the distributing reflectors provide a more concentrated beam for work at average distance and the concentrating reflector throws a long, narrow beam of light for illumination at long distances.

Claims advanced for the advantages of flood-lighting, aside from the obvious advertising value of this form of illumination, include a clean revelation of the architectural beauty of a building unmarred by signs or lamp outlines.

Frames—Poster, Lobby

POSTER AND LOBBY display frames are manufactured in standard sizes. There are one sheet to hang and one sheet with easel back—three sheets to hang and three sheets with easel back—easel to accommodate a one-sheet and eight combination frames to hang and with 11x14 photographs. Another combination often used is one to take a 22x28 photograph, eight 11x14 photographs and date strip.

Photograph frames are also offered in standard sizes for five or six photographs, 11x14 in size.

Most of the modern theatres are having their lobby display frames and cases built to order to fit the recesses and spaces provided for by the architect. Manufacturers of frames and cases gladly furnish complete drawings and specifications for the theatre owner's approval.

Furniture, Theatre

A NUMBER OF factors should guide the exhibitor in the selection of his furniture. Comfort and restfulness are among the first considerations. Upholstering materials offer a splendid opportunity for accents in the color scheme of the room. Over-elaborateness and that which breathes of the gaudy should generally be avoided.

All furniture depends upon the finish. A glassy varnish finish on any piece cheapens the quality of the framework. It scratches easily and shows dust more readily. A soft finish is always desirable, and this holds particularly true of gold furniture, which looks cheap unless nicely toned down.

Furniture for the men's room should always be of a heavy type, giving a manly and clubby appearance. Leather upholstering is quite proper. Women's rest room should be dainty and more genteel. Cane furniture is appropriate here.

Fuses, Electric

ELECTRICAL FUSES are intentional weakened spots introduced into an electrical circuit and designed to fuse or "blow" due to excess current caused by overload or a short circuit in the line. Thus the circuit is opened before the excess current can damage any other part of the wiring or apparatus forming the circuit. They are purely a protective device and require replacement when the non-renewable type is used, or the renewal link replaced when the renewable type is used.

Fuses are preferable type of protective device because of their lower cost, their enclosed parts, and the absence of moving parts. It is good business to keep extra fuses or renewals on hand at all times. A sufficient supply will prevent a dark house. The theatre owner should not experiment on the use of fuses, but should take the advice of a skilled electrician so that an overload will not result.

Fuses may be more safely pulled than otherwise if a fuse puller is used. This device may prevent burns, injury to the equipment and other mishaps, and it costs but little.

Gazing Balls, Lobby

A DECORATIVE FEATURE which has fascinated humanity through centuries because of the supposed occult powers of the Oriental to see reflected in it the future of life is the gazing ball. This decorative piece, always an attraction, lends tone to the colorful lobby.

Gelatine Sheets

THE GELATINE SHEET, for the colorful and atmospheric lighting of stages, organs, sections of the screen and other features which take the spot, is as vital as the spot and flood. The best gelatine sheets are both durable and flexible, and are only slightly affected by atmospheric changes in the theatre. Cooling systems do not cause such sheets to fall limpid from the frames. The list price of gelatine ranges from 20c and up for 100 sheets. Any desired color many be obtained, either in the individual sheet or through combinations.

Generators, Motor

THIS ELECTRICAL device is designed to produce direct current for the arc lamp on the projection machine, spotlights or double dissolving stereopticon. It consists of an alternating current motor, directly connected on a shaft to a direct current generator. Motor generators are made for every current requirement to deliver amperages from 20 amperes to 800 amperes.

There are 20 and 30 ampere outfits for reflecting arc lamps; 40, 60 and 80 ampere outfits for the ordinary arcs, and 80, 100, 150 ampere and larger generators for use with high intensity lamps.

Motor generators are made in two types, the series generators and the multiple arc generators.

The series arc is for use with two picture machine arcs. It is so designed that for the period of time needed to warm up the second picture machine arc, preparatory to changing from one picture machine to the other, it will carry both arc lamps at the same amperage without danger of losing the light on the arc lamp on the running picture machine.

Multiple arc generators are designed and built to generate direct current for many arcs. They are used in the motion picture booths where there are two arcs on the picture machines, one or more spotlights and a double dissolving stereopticon and effect machine. The multiple arc generator correctly built, will carry the entire battery or arc lamps and various amperages. The variance in amperage is controlled by the necessary rheostats.

Hand Driers

WHAT IS KNOWN as the sanitary hand drier for the lavatories of theatres is an electrically operated blower type of drier, through which a current of warm air evaporates the water on the hands. Driers of this type are built of cast iron with a heavy white porcelain finish with the metal parts of nickel plate. These driers stand about 46 inches high with full 360-degree swivel nozzle and are operated by a foot lever or automatic cut-off push button which turns the switch on and off.

Hardware, Stage

WITH THE GROWING popularity in theatres of presentation acts a need is apparent for equipment to meet the varied physical requirements in the way of stage hardware to accomplish this purpose. The subject of stage hardware takes in many items, large and small, which are equipment essentials in the stage that is to be prepared to house a variety of acts or talent.

Under the heading of stage hardware are included such items as blocks and pulleys of all types, counterweights and arbors, belay pins, cleats, curtain tracks, keystones and corners, pin rails, pin wire, rope, manila and wire, rope locks, sand bags, smoke pocket stage screws, trim clamps, winches, carriers for extra-large screens and horns. Steel curtains and counterweight rigging are also important items of the equipment in the modern stage.

Heating Systems

THERE ARE A number of types and arrangements of theatre heating systems, each designed to fit the individual building. One of the systems is known as the fuel-to-air method whereby the transmission of the heating effect from the fuel is obtained without the intermediate processes of transmission through piping and radiators. The volumes of outdoor air entering the system are heated quickly and uniformly, producing comfortable heating and invigorating ventilation in all seasons of the year. The heating units most generally used to warm the incoming air are commonly known as unit heat generators.

■ DIRECT CURRENT MOTORS ■ GENERATORS ■ MOTOR GENERATOR SETS FOR SPECIAL PURPOSES ■

More specifically, the operation of the warming and ventilating is as follows:

The air is drawn in through a fresh air shaft into the fan room, passing through air washers and being thoroughly washed and properly humidified. From there by means of large blowers, it is forced through the generator chambers and properly and scientifically distributed to the portions of the building to be heated and ventilated.

The system may be so arranged that, while the blower unit is in combination with the heater, it can be run independently and unrestricted by the heater for summer cooling.

The generators are so constructed that any kind of fuel, including oil or gas, can be used. The fires are controlled automatically by means of temperature control equipment, responding to thermostats placed in the theatre in various locations. Utmost flexibility is obtainable on account of the installaiton of these units or separate heat generators.

Equipment of this type is being used in every class of theatre from the 300-seat village playhouse to the 5,000-seat palatial home of the cinema art. On account of the exceptional flexibility, convenience, economy of operation, and perfect results obtained from the use of any kind of fuel, an owner obtains an up-to-date heating system as well as a properly designed ventilating plant for both winter and summer use. It is said that the installation cost is low and the operation is economical in such a system.

Heating Systems, Oil

HEATING BY MEANS of oil is growing rapidly in popularity among theatres. Some of the country's largest playhouses are installing oil heating systems of various makes and types. They are also to be found in smaller theatres. Among the advantages claimed for oil heating is the matter of cleanliness and subsequent savings in draperies and redecorating costs. The operation being automatic, the oil burner requires virtually no attention, effecting a saving in janitor service. Another advantage pointed out is the fact that oil burners give heat only when needed.

Most oil burners are operated in connection with a thermostat so that when the temperature falls even one degree below the desired point, the thermostat establishes connection which starts the burner again. When the temperature goes above the desired degree, the heat is automatically shut off.

Horn Lifts and Horn Towers

A HORN LIFT is an automatically controlled electric driven elevator used to raise and lower sound horns to their proper places behind the screen. They operate on the hydraulic, cable and drum and screw lift principle, and when the stage is needed for acts, the lift lowers the horn down under the stage. The portion of the stage flooring directly above the lift is attached to the lift, becoming a part of it, and any stage setup located over the lift goes up with it and is ready for use the instant the lift returns to the low level.

Horn towers are structural steel towers on which the horns are fastened. These towers are generally on rubber-tired, ball bearing casters so that they may be moved about silently to properly locate the horns behind the screen. When the horns are not in use the towers can be pushed out of the way.

Insurance

NO BUSINESS MAN today would risk his investment by operating his business without ample insurance. Insurance is obtainable for theatre buildings and equipment to the same extent that it may be procured for other types of establishments, and safety codes and modern methods of construction, installation and manufacture have permitted such a reduction in insurance rates covering exhibitors' risks that ample protection is within reach of any theatre enterprise. Besides the usual forms of insurance covering fire, accidents to employes and patrons, etc., there is rain insurance, which offers exhibitors protection against poor patronage due to storms rising suddenly before show time.

This type of insurance is now used universally to protect the operators of outdoor amusements and sports events, and the financial success of more and more indoor enterprises of this nature are thus being protected, also. When the picture has been bought, perhaps at a high price, and considerable money has been spent in advertising it, a sudden storm can mean a great loss to the exhibitor. Rain insurance protects the exhibitor against this ever-present possibility.

Inter-Communicating Telephones

SYSTEMATIZING OF business has relieved the individual of much routine and has increased thereby his efficiency. In the systematizing of business the inter-communicating telephone is playing an important part. In the theatre it contributes to a smooth functioning organization. No theatre of consequence today operates without such a telephone system.

Ladders, Safety

THE SAFETY LADDER is a safeguard, both for the employer and the employe. It minimizes the risk of accidents and the possibility of becoming involved in costly law suits. The safety ladder has the approval of the Underwriters Laboratories. Sizes range from 3 feet to 16 feet, and the list price ranges from $9.50 to $32. Because of the rigidity of these ladders, they are time-savers.

Lamp Coloring

LAMP DIPS or lamp colorings are manufactured by numerous companies, and can be obtained in either the clear color or in a transluscent shade.

There are three types of coloring. One type is for a temporary dip where the color is to be changed often. For such changes, incidentally a color remover can be purchased.

The next type is the color used for dipping lamps which it is desired to color for permanent inside use. This color should not be used for outside lighting as it will not withstand the elements.

The third type is the outside coloring. This is for use on lamps used for lighting electric signs, marquises and other outside lighting. It is a very quickly drying color, taking from three to four minutes to dry. Lamp dip coloring sells for $1.50 per pint and up.

Lamps, Decorative

THE VARIOUS lamp manufacturers offer a number of decorative lamps. There are two types of flame shaped lamps used on fixtures with imitation candles and on standing candelabra. They are made in standard base and in candelabra or miniature base, and may be had in frost or sprayed colors—blue and red—flame tint —amber or canary.

Also considered as decorative lamps are the standard globular and pear shaped lamps, which are sprayed in colors as mentioned above.

Lamps, High Intensity

IT IS VERY encouraging, indeed, to note the many recent improvements in the high intensity lamp for moving picture propection.

With playhouses of every increasing seating capacity and consequent increase of projection range or "throw," the high intensity lamp has rapidly become a necessity with very few alternatives for light source in the larger houses.

The high intensity lamp, just a few years ago, while considered a necessity in the larger houses, was also looked upon as a rather troublesome piece of apparatus to be gotten along with because there was nothing else that could serve its purpose. But today the high intensity lamp has been perfected in such measure that it is no longer troublesome or intricate from an operating standpoint, and gives satisfactory results.

Lamps, Incandescent, Projection

THIS TERM may be confusing as there are lamps for motion picture projection as well as lamps for spotlight, searchlight, floodlight, and stereopticon projection. Some are quite different, and each should be used in the service it is designed for.

There are two lamps made especially for theatre projection with professional apparatus. The 900 watt, 30 ampere, 30 volt lamp and the 600 watt, 20 ampere, 30 volt lamp. They cannot be used on the ordinary lighting circuit without a regulator or transformer to change the current to the correct amperage and voltage.

For portable projectors such as are generally classed as "amateur" there are several types of projection lamps in very wide use. There are the 50, 100 and 200 watt lamps for use on 115 volt circuits and the 200 and 250 watt, 50 volt lamps which are operated with a regulator.

All of these lamps are designed to project the most possible light on the screen. The 900 watt lamp produces enough light to work efficiently on throws up to 100 feet. The 600 watt lamp is used for throws shorter than 80 feet. The other lamps are for short throw work, generally with 16-mm. film.

Other lamps designed for spotlight service can be had in wattages of from 100 watts to 10,000 watts for use on 115 volt lines. The 100 and 200 watt sizes are all standard and are carried in stock. There is a standard lamp of 1,000 watts for use on 115 volt lines for motion picture projection. It is not, however, as efficient as the 30 volt type for motion picture work and is generally used for non-theatrical service.

Lamps, Mazda

THE USE of the Mazda lamp has broadened in recent years, and today these lamps are used in projectors in the theatres and on stages of the studios. It has been said, and perhaps rightly, that light sells the show. Especially is this true in the cities where scores of theatres are vying with each other for patronage. In the display signs, in the strip signs, in the marquise, in the lobby and in the theatre proper, the Mazda lamp has made the White Way, whether in the metropolitan centers or in the small towns, whiter. It is being used in the studio as well as theatre. Durable colored lamps may now be purchased with coloring on the inside, permitting the lamps to be washed.

Lamps, Reflector Arc

A CARBON arc lamp for motion picture projection using a reflector for projecting the light through the aperture of the picture machine.

The complete lamp contains as a part of the unit an automatic arc control adjusted to operate at a variance of a fraction of a volt at the arc. The advantage of the reflecting arc lamp is that it will operate at from 20 to 25 per cent of the electrical current necessary to operate the old style arc lamp. The carbons used are much smaller in size, making an additional saving. The reflector arc is now accepted as a necessity by progressive exhibitors, because, in addition to saving electric current, it produces a flat even field of bright crisp white light which is very desirable in motion picture projection.

Lenses

FOR MOTION PICTURE theatre service there are projection lenses and condensing lenses. The latter are also used in projection but are placed in the lamphouse and condense the rays to a spot on the aperture. Projection lenses are objective lenses placed in the projector head.

The prime requirement of a projection lens is to give a bright, well defined picture on the screen without any distortion or color rays. These lenses are made in four sizes: Eighth, quarter, half and three-quarters (diameters, respectively, of 1 11/16, 1 5/16, 2 25/32 and 3¼ inches).

The one-eighth and one-quarter sizes are furnished in equivalent focii of two inches E. F., to eight inches E. F. The half-size is furnished in equivalent focii of four and a half inches E. F. to ten inches E. F., and the three-quarters in equivalent focii of from six inches E. F. to ten inches E.F. There is also procurable a bifocal projection lens with a range of from one-half to three-quarters of an inch in focal length, designed to eliminate the change of lenses in shifting operation from sound to silent films, and vice versa. All the sizes named are standard. Focal lengths are determined by the length size of the picture desired.

Lifts and Elevators for Orchestra, Organ, Stage and Horns

WITH THE ADVANCE in showmanship many new types of equipment have become factors in motion picture presentation and its supplementary entertainment. Not the least of these new factors are the lifts and elevators which play such an important part in the success of programs today. The modern theatre has this equipment.

Lighting Control Equipment

THE MODERN theatre with a well balanced and effective lighing system, has made many demands on the manufacturers of lighting control equipment. Elaborate color effects must be possible and to change the lighting and gradually merge the light from one color to another without attracting the audiences a very flexible control system is required. Even the small control systems permit the operator to produce hundreds of color shades. Generally each color group has its own master control which is cross-interlocked with the ground master wheel device. Efficient control systems are available for every size house, no matter how small or how large.

Lighting Fixtures and Decorative Lighting

WHILE lighting fixtures constitute one of the outstanding features of the theatre today their style and application are obviously best determined by the individual treatment of the theatre and its requirements. It is significant, however, that a number of leading manufacturers have established special departments to give time and attention to the subject of theatre lighting and fixtures.

Lighting and Power Plants

EMERGENCY lighting plants are equipment designed to furnish power for supplying illumination and operating the show in the event of a failure of the local power supply. It is said that the financial loss suffered by admissions returned by a theatre through only one power failure a year would more than compensate for the cost of equipment of this type. In addition to financial loss, a power failure during a performance frequently results in loss of life and property through the resultant panic.

Emergency lighting plants are made in several types such as the gasoline engine type, water turbine type, motor generator and battery type. In the case of the motor generator type several sources of power are provided to meet every contingency, which, together, form an interlocking type of protection.

The first source of power for the emergency lights of the theatre is the regular power supply, either from central station lines or from private generating plant. In the case of the private electric plant, if it is automatically operated, it can be so installed with an automatic transfer switch that the instant the regular supply of current fails, the private electric plant is automatically started. The electric plant then supplies the electrical needs of the theatre to the extent of its capacity. This it continues to do for as long as the regular supply is shut off. When this service is again resumed, the plant automatically stops.

The second source for the emergency, exit or hazard line circuits, is a special heavy duty glass jar storage battery, which is automatically kept charged by a motor generator set or rectifier. The capacity of the plant depends upon the total necessary load and the length of time protection is desired. The normal alternating current is fed through the transfer switch direct to the lighting lines and in the event of power failure, the batteries to the lighting lines. The batteries than supply the necessary power until the normal service is resumed, or until the batteries are discharged.

In some states the emergency, exit and hazard light circuits must be of a lower voltage than that of the normal power supply lines. In such cases, a transformer is used to step-down the supply line voltage to that of the emergency circuit voltage.

The third source of supply for the emergency circuits is the motor generator set itself. In case the A.C. transformer circuit, which normally feeds the 32-volt lights, should fail the motor generator set is operated from the man power supply line and connected to the emergency exit light circuits through its battery circuit. The battery will carry the lights only as long as necessary to start the motor generator set. After the motor generator is started the battery floats on the line.

The heavy-duty storage battery is kept continuously charged by means of a motor generator set, which is operated from the regular power lines, on an individual circuit separate from the emergency circuits.

Lights, Spot

ARE MADE in arc and incandescent types for use on stage—in the booth—in cove lighting, and for head spotting. Most spotlights on the market can be used for spot lighting and for full flood. The arc types are made in sizes of 3 ampere up to 150 ampere. They come complete with stand and attachment cord and connecter. Within the last year, the high intensity spot has appeared. It is an adaptation of the high intensity lamp to spot and flood lighting.

The incandescent spotlights are in sizes of from 250 watt to 2,000 watt. The sizes usually used are 250, 400, 500 and 1,000 watt.

The small head spots of 250 watts are used for cove lighting or spotting the head of a singer or organist. The incandescent spotlights come either with floor standard or pipe hangers for border lighting batons.

In stage work spotlights are frequently banked one above the other on a stand and used for flood-lighting from the wings. Prices range from $12 to $500.

Lithographers

THIS IS the show business. The one-sheet, three-sheet and 24-sheet are business pullers. They lend a splash to outdoor and lobby board advertising. In having special lithographic work done on special attractions theatre men generally prefer the block letter type because of the greater speed in production. In outstanding instances exhibitors have billed a show with 48 sheets. The cost of special lithographic work depends upon volume.

Block posters adapted from suitable designs are very striking and used extensively. One-sheets, three-sheets and six-sheets, used liberally both in and outside the lobby, and 24-sheets on billboards, provide the box office with a constant drawing power.

Lobby Display

AN ATTRACTIVE lobby is a boon to business. To conform to the beauty in lobby decoration, colorful and attractive lobby displays have been created. Automatic poster displays in polished bronze are constructed for convenient display of standard stills and photographs, featuring current and coming attractions. Art glass today is advantageously used, making a striking and effective display. Many artistic endeavors have been directed toward the lobby with the result that today few shoddy lobbies greet the patron.

Lobby Display Frames

LOBBY ADVERTISING is an obviously effective business stimulant and in this connection the use of lobby display frames easily ranks first in appearance. With the effective display frames now available it is possible not only to obtain a maximum advertising value from their use but also to add materially to the appearance of the lobby. The front of the theatre may now be "dressed up" in excellent fashion with these frames. In the case of new theatres it is common practice to design lobby frames in conformity with the architectural style of the house.

Artistic lobby display frames are now available which contain mirrors in the center with space for lithographs on either side. Or, display frames in the form of corner cases may be advantageously used. Literature on corner cases is visible from both the lobby and street sides. Lobby display frames of brass with finishes such as statuary bronze, verde antique, brushed brass, oxidized brass, gun metal, dull copper, have the advantage of requiring no polishing.

Overcrowding of the lobby with display frames produces a detrimental effect and for this reason it is necessary that good judgment and care be exercised not only in the selection of the frames but in their placing as well. Working from blue prints or an accurate diagram enables manufacturers to suggest effective and harmonious arrangements for equipping the lobby with a display frame scheme.

Luminous Paints

LUMINOUS PAINTS are being used more and more in theatrical production work. The sets and costumes may be so covered with this material that their coloring is different under different tones of light, or certain sections may be invisible altogether until acted upon by certain classes as of light vibrations. A method which came into use during 1929 employs the ultra violet ray, acting upon certain fluorescent materials. These materials are substances, the atomic structure of which is such that instead of absorbing short wave lengths, they receive them and throw them back as longer waves, the colors of the waves (the colors beheld by the observer) depending on the wave lengths.

Music Publishers

APPRECIATING the important part played by music in the theatre several companies have recently compiled special music for the guidance and assistance of theatre organists and orchestras. Twelve compositions have already been issued by a company headed by Henry Waterson and it is planned by this organization to issue subsequent numbers at regular intervals for theatre orchestras. In this music and orchestral arrangement has been so scored that the numbers can be played with maximum effect by any combination of instruments, large and small.

Special books or organ music have also recently been available. These comprise classic, modern, characteristic, marches, opera selections and sacred numbers, making a valuable addition to every organist's library.

Music Stands

MUSIC STANDS are made in a number of styles, from those of simple design for smaller houses to more pretentious and ornamental ones for the elaborate theatres.

There are several very practical, up-to-date and attractive designs in music stands including the open, closed, semi-closed and resonant types. A popular open type is one in which ornamental bell-shaped lamp shades are placed one on each side of the music rack just above the level of the top of the music; this type is very practical for musicians on account of the unobstructed view it provides immediately over the top of the music sheet; its simple lines and attractive appearance are unusual and unique.

Of the closed type perhaps a popular kind is made in an elaborate design with lamps concealed above in the music sheet compartment.

Among the newest is the semi-closed type which has a solid rack of the open end design, with a 10-watt lamp concealed above the rack under a triangular shaped shade, or hood; this stand has also a flat table for the convenience of musicians. The new resonant type is of the closed design, having two 10-watt lamps concealed in the enclosure in which the music rack is placed; the resonator is below the music rack; this stand increases the volume and resonance of the orchestra and eliminates all pit light from about 90 per cent of the house. It gives the musicians better light with less wattage. Prices range from $15 to $75.

Manufacturers of music stands are also prepared to supply conductor stands to harmonize with the type of music stand used.

Organs

IT IS HARDLY necessary here to call attention to the ever growing importance of organ music in theatres. Next to the film and projection machines, the organ today is a recognized necessity and a proven box office attraction. Virtually every phase of the organ's place and use in theatres has been discussed in numerous articles in BETTER THEATRES.

Space here will not permit, nor is it desirable, that a lengthy discussion of organ and organ music be given. It is in order to call attention, however, to several facts in connection with organs that are of more or less recent development. One of these is the location of the organ grilles. While these have been conspicuous in the past, usually on either side of the stage opening a number of theatres are now placing the organ grille in the ceiling, directly in front of the center of the proscenium. At the Roxy theatre in New York the organ chambers are located beneath the stage.

Mounting the organ console on an elevator so that the organist may be brought into full view of the audience during a solo is another comparatively recent feature that is winning great vogue. Double consoles are now used in a number of theatres.

In the purchase of an organ the theatre owner should make sure that the instrument is built for theatre work.

In the main, aside from detail considerations, the important thing to bear in mind in the purchase of a theatre organ is whether or not the instrument is designed and built to meet theatre requirements. Demands upon an organ to be used in a theatre and in a church, for example, are obviously at variance. The result is that organs for theatres are built along exacting lines, expressly for the work they are intended to perform.

Organ Blowers

THE ORGAN BLOWER is an important piece of equipment, and is manufactured in sizes suitable for organs of all types. They may be obtained in units ranging from 1/6 h.p. to 75 h.p., which are multi-stage, multi-pressure machines. These machines are made so as to give the proper wind supply for the size organ for which it is desired.

Kinetic Engineering Company, Landsdowne, Pa.
Spencer Turbine Company, Hartford, Conn.
Zephyr Electric Organ Blower Company, Orrville, O.

Organ Chimes

THE THEATRE ORGAN, in the range of musical instruments which it reproduces, is orchestral in performance. Perhaps no musical instrument is as responsive to the human touch. Chimes, marimbas, harps, vibra-harps, celestes, xylophones, bells, glockenspiels—the range of instruments is limited only by the price of the instrument installed. And each instrument must be as finely constructed as the instruments used by the orchestra.

J. C. Deagon, Inc., 1770 Berteau Avenue, Chicago, Ill.
The Kohler-Liebich Company, Inc., 3549-53 Lincoln Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Organ Heaters

REACTION upon organ music and the instrument itself of cold weather and dampness has led to the development of organ chamber heaters which keep the temperature in the chamber at a uniform degree, preventing loss of pitch, and deterioration of the organ. Electric heaters with thermostat control are used for this purpose. Organ chambers are usually tuned at a temperature of from 65 to 75 degrees. If the temperature is allowed to drop 10 degrees below the tuning temperature the metal pipes become flat by a quarter or half tone. A 10 degree rise above the tuning temperature will cause the same pipes to become sharp and further rise puts many of them out of pitch. The effect of dampness is to cause a swelling and consequent deterioration of wooden chests, pipes and other parts in the chambers.

Since organ chambers are not standard in size the amount of heating equipment must be determined for each chamber. The larger the chamber or the greater the area exposed outside walls, the larger must be the wattage of the heater installed. Heaters should be mounted near the bottom of exposed or outside wall so that rising warm air from heater will counteract the descending columns of chilled air. Thermostats should be located at the point the best circulation takes place and out of reach of direct heat from heaters.

Organ loft heaters may be so constructed as to deflect the heat back to the floor of the organ chamber, allowing the hot air to mushroom out before rising through the organ mechanism. This is accomplished by a hooded top.

In large theatres operating afternoon and evening, heaters are usually left in operation 24 hours. In smaller houses they may be disconnected when the show is over and started again by simply throwing a switch when needed.

Ornamental Fountains

ORNAMENTAL fountains are invariably places of interest in the theatre. In addition to their decorative value they create a desirable atmosphere of coolness in the summer time through the sound of the trickling water as it falls into the base of the fountain.

Ornamental fountains may be obtained in many sizes and in many forms. The water pressure is supplied by a small pump operated from light socket current, the same water being used over again in most instances.

Perfumes and Perfumers

DISAGREEABLE odors are unfortunately a usual concomitant of crowds, particularly in such compact enclosures as the motion picture auditorium. These odors may be effectively eliminated by the use of highly aromatic perfumes, method of diffusion is the simple one of which are diffused throughout the air. One placing the perfume in decorative cones, resembling a vase, at various places along the walls. These cones are made of clay and readily absorb the perfume, which may be said to saturate the cones, and the odor radiates from the latter to quite a large area beyond.

Another widely used method is to spray the air with a perfume at suitable intervals.

A trifle less simple and perhaps more effective method is that of placing perfume in a disseminator located at the ventilating fan so that the evaporated liquid or solidified perfume will carry its fragrance through the auditorium along with the fresh air.

Prices vary from 50 cents for the vase-disseminators, to $2.50 for the ventilating system disseminators. A variety of odors are obtainable at from several dollars to $7.50 per pound.

Phonograph Motors

PHONOGRAPH MOTORS are small motors that drive the turntable of a phonograph or non-synchronous device. These replace the spring motor that requires winding. Some motors are universal and work in 110 volts, 60 cycles, or most any lighting circuit. Others work on A. C. current only and are designed for frequency ranges which the purchaser must specify.

Phonograph Turntables

PHONOGRAPH turntables are metal rotating discs on which the records are placed for reproduction. These discs are rotated by phonograph motors, either spring or electric, and have a device to regulate the running speed. The tops of these discs are covered with a velvety fabric to eliminate danger of scratching the record. Alongside the turntable is a supporting arm that carries the needle.

Photoelectric Cells

THE FUNCTIONS of the photoelectric cell in sound installations is well known to exhibitors who are showing talking pictures. These important cells have now been brought up to a high state of perfection, having high sensitivity and long life. Photoelectric cells are available in various sizes and the usual price range is from $15 up.

Pianos

PIANOS VARY IN SIZE and type, depending upon the use to which each is to be put. Both upright and baby grand, reproducing and non-producing pianos, are widely used in theatres as entertainment and to accompany the picture. The use of pianos on the mezzanine of the theatre is becoming more and more general. The larger theatres will have as many as six and eight pianos as a part of the permanent equipment.

Piano Trucks

THE THEATRE TODAY must operate on an efficient basis. Its costly equipment must be guarded against inadvertent damage. Equipment, also, must be moved from one section of the theatre to another. To accomplish these tasks, a theatre should be amply equipped with time-saving, safety-saving and utility-saving devices. The piano truck is a guard against damage to the piano or organ which must be moved about the theatre stage or other parts.

be obtained in a number of colors and color combinations.

Plastic paint comes in the form of a white powder. Before application it is mixed with water; sometimes, also, with coloring matter. It may be tinted with dry colors before application, or the plastic paint may be sized and then glazed with an oil glaze tinted with oil colors. It may be applied on any type of surface and when thus properly applied and treated it can be washed from time to time with soap and water.

In the decoration of theatres today, the use of plastic paint opens up a new field of expression to the architect and decorator. It is not only applicable in many striking and unusual texture effects to walls and ceilings, and in remarkably beautiful blended color combinations—but it is also adaptable to many unique, original and conventional treatments. It can be used in panels and frescoes, in sgraffito and relief work. Sprayed with bronze or aluminum powder over a richly colored background, it produces gorgeous gold and silver effects.

Plumbing Fixtures

EVERY PART of the theatre should be in keeping with the general architectural beauty of the theatre. Also, those parts of construction which are under cover of plaster and other exterior coverings must meet the requirements of building codes. The value of hidden fittings of high quality cannot be too strongly stressed as a factor in efficient and economical theatre operations. Included in these specifications are plumbing fixtures, both exposed and concealed.

Plumbing fixtures play an important part, both in the decorating scheme of a theatre and the cost of insurance. They should, therefore, be investigated by the theatre owner, remembering that they may be had in both white and in colors, and with various distinguishing sanitary features.

Pop Corn Machines

POP CORN MACHINES offer an excellent opportunity for theatres to increase their revenue, according to information from exhibitors who are operating them. One exhibitor states that in one week he cleared $59 with a corn popper in his lobby. Figures provided by another exhibitor state that in six months he took $967.91, out of which his expenses were $296.94, leaving a profit of $670.97. One theatre circuit in the east is using pop corn machines at five or its houses.

Pop corn machines may be had in a number of sizes and styles, ranging from small models to elaborate machines which also include peanut warming facilities.

Portable Projectors

PORTABLE PROJECTORS are motion picture projection machines which are designed to be set up only temporarily and not for permanent installation in a regular theatre, as a rule, although used there. They are particularly adapted for use in schools, clubs, etc., and may be obtained for installation in connection with leading makes of sound equipment or with sound apparatus built in. There is a model with a heavy pedestal for permanent installation.

Semi-Portable projectors are standard motion picture machines which may be utilized for either temporary or permanent installations. That is to say, these machines, while sturdily constructed, are comparatively light in weight and may be moved from room to room or from one building to another. Specially designed carrying cases are also provided at slight additonal cost for convenience in transporting for longer distances. For permanent installations, the model with the heavy pedestal no doubt has its advantages. Sound apparatus specially constructed for portable machines is available.

Poster Projectors

THESE MACHINES are projectors operated similarly to steropticons, except that instead of employing transparent slides, matter printed on opaque surfaces can be projected upon a screen. They are used in the making of posters for lobby displays and similar purposes. The artist projects a drawing or photograph from a press sheet or other prepared advertising matter, upon the surface on which he is to make his own drawing, controlling the image size by moving the projector nearer to or farther from the objective. The system of mirrors and lenses in the projector gives an image of the same direction and proportions as those of the original. The artist then merely traces along the projected lines, filling in the colors as indicated.

Poster projectors usually allow the use of original subjects as large as six or seven inches long by five or six inches high. Subjects larger than that can be projected and copied in sections.

Programs

UNUSUAL PROGRESS has been made in the publication of theatre programs in the past few years. Today the program is one of the outstanding advertising mediums of the motion picture house. It goes into the home, where it is perused by the family.

In obtaining programs the exhibitors need only specify the names of the attractions and the dates. Within eight hours programs containing effective copy, suitably illustrated, are completed. This is possible through the efficiency of highly organized and ably manned printing plants devoted exclusively to this work. Copy provided in theatre programs carries a well balanced selling "punch" creating a desire to see the attractions. The programs are amply illustrated and complete facts concerning stars, players, author and other matters of interest are included.

In the dissemination of theatre programs many theatres have regular lists of patrons to whom programs are mailed each week while others distribute the programs to patrons as they leave the theatre.

Prominent concerns specializing in this work are:

Program Covers

CONSTRUCTION OF bigger and better theatres has developed a demand for a higher class of advertising. Offset color program covers are representative of the efforts of theatre owners toward increasing artistry and dignity in their advertising. These colored program covers are highly artistic and colorful. The fact that they are extensively used has enabled production of program covers of this type at a very reasonable cost, considering their beauty and effectiveness. In fact, the use of program covers has enabled exhibitors to attain a highly desirable individuality in this phase of their advertising. These program covers combine all the elements of a program announcement with the necessary distinctive features of a high class house organ. Prices range from $3 per thousand to $7 per thousand, depending on size of cover.

Projection Booths and Equipment

THE PROJECTION room, or booth, because of the fact that it is one of the nerve centers of the motion picture theatre, is becoming standardized. Not in size, naturally, but in general construction, and the high standard of equipment, etc.

The projection booth, because of the very nature of the purpose it serves, must be fireproof and ideally ventilated. Though standardized in the general meaning of the word, the booth, in its placement, construction and equipment, should have individual treatment for each theatre. The skilled projection engineer should be consulted on this vital phase of motion picture presentation.

There are many things to keep in mind in the purchase of projection room equipment. Certain parts of this equipment must conform to the building codes, it must be practical, it must satisfy the projectionist and it must lend itself to better projection. It is wise in a majority of instances to consult a skilled projectionist before purchasing this equipment, for his knowledge of completeness and product is broad. The projection booth today is an efficiency room with an expert in charge, and the equipment purchaser should be selected with that in mind.

The design and layout of the projection room should have the careful attention of the architect or builder at the time the plans for the theatre are being prepared. The co-operation of projection machine manufacturers or their distributors can profitably be called into use in the planning of a projection room and in considering its equipment. A number of instances are known where the design of the projection room, relegated to last-minute consideration by the architect or owner, has necessitated expensive remodeling when it has been found that beams and other constructional features made proper projection impossible.

The desirable projection room may vary in size but to accommodate two projectors, it should be at least 15 feet by 10 feet, with 12 foot ceiling. This size will also care for a spotlight and slide dissolver. By all means toilet facilities should be provided and a shower bath is highly desirable.

For construction, a floor of 6 inch cement slab is recommended with 4 inch tile wall. Doors, windows and casings should be of steel. There should be two entrances to the booth. A room adjacent to the booth, at least 8 by 8 and well ventilated should be provided for the generator.

It is important that in the event of fire the flame or smoke be kept out of the auditorium and for this reason the aperture on the front wall of the booth should be lined with steel and fitted with steel covers which will automatically drop when a fusible link melts that is over each projector, releasing the aperture covers.

Projection Machines

PROJECTORS HERE referred to are the standard non-portable machines designed for permanent installation, usually in theatres. It is the expressed belief of theatre owners and projectionists that practically ideal projection is possible with equipment available at present, provided it is in the hands of a competent operator. Modern projection machines are the result of many years of improvement and development to meet the ever-growing requirements for the best possible screen results.

Noticeable in the latest developments are the efforts of the manufacturers to keep abreast of the exacting requirements for projection in conjunction with sound reproduction. A type of shutter designed to eliminate the heat from the film and to provide air currents tending to draw dust and dirt from the film, are among the latest developments.

All late model standard projectors are either constructed specially for sound picture projection or are readily adapted to any make or model of sound apparatus, either for sound-on-disc or sound-on-film. The latter method, due to greater thickness and density of film requires the use of much more amperage at the arc and this factor has been met with lamps and lamphouses of greater illuminative output capacity. Also the use of the perforated sound screen has to a very great extent added to the necessity of greater illumination. Moving picture projectors are now constructed more acurately and sturdily than ever before due to the more exacting requirements of talking picture projection and greater area of picture surfaces.

While thousands of dollars are frequently spent in many other departments of the theatre an apparent indifference to the importance of the best possible projection has been shown by too many theatre owners in the past. Fortunately, this attitude is undergoing a very marked change and projection is beginning to receive due attention.

The motion picture theatre, despite the many trimmings connected with its construction today, offers to the public as its chief attraction the film story on the screen. Even sound has not made clarity of image less important. That the projected image should be as bright and steady as it is possible to produce by modern machinery and engineering skill goes without saying.

One of the handicaps to the securing of proper projection in the past has been in the delay given this phase of the theatre at the time plans for the house are made. In a measure responsibility for this may be placed with the architect who, in his desire to create a palace of beauty and grandeur has apparently failed to consider that such facilities are without purpose unless the thing which the public pays its money to see—the picture on the screen—is of a quality to produce the highest type of entertainment.

It is not the desire nor the intention here to go into any technical details concerning projection machines. It is rather aimed in these columns to impress upon the exhibitor who is not already alive to the fact that projection in his theatre should have his keenest attention. The picture is the main attraction practically always and any skimping in its quality ultimately will be reflected in decreased receipts.

Projectors, Advertising

EXPLOITATION IN THE theatre lobby by means of an advertising projector using trailers from curent or forthcoming attractions is a means of theatre publicity that is growing in popularity. Projectors for this purpose are available together with a trailer service. By means of recessing the screen daylight projection has been made possible. ### Public Address Systems

PUBLIC ADDRESS SYSTEMS provide a means of electrically amplifying the voice. The microphone picks up the words, and as electrical energy corresponding to the original sound waves, these "words" are carried through amplifiers to the speakers, where they are transformed into their original physical form as sound waves, only now of much greater intensity than when merely created by the human vocal mechanism. Public address systems are used principally in the theatre for announcements, though it is adaptable to many related purposes. Microphonic attachment may be made at several points in the system, making its function available to the manager in his office as well as backstage.

Publicity Clocks

THIS IS A DEVICE designed to produce revenue for the theatre by means of securing advertising from neighborhood merchants and shops. The publicity clock is placed in the projection room and projects the advertisement of a local merchant upon a circular face to either side of the proscenium arch. Upon this face are shown in silhouette the hours and hands of a clock. The clock shows the time and a new advertisement is projected upon its face every two minutes. Some manufacturers of the clock operate upon a basis of paying the theatre a certain amount of money for the privilege of installing the clock for one year in his theatre. They can obtain the advertising from the neighborhood stores. As the value of the advertising increases, the sum which the theatre obtains from the manufacturer increases.

Records for Sound Equipment

Recording

MOTION PICTURE sound recording is divided into two general types—recording on discs, and recording on film.

In modern electrical recording the sound is picked up by a sensational electrical microphone. The microphone sets up a weak current which pulsates with the vibrations of the sound being recorded. This current is amplified, filtered and again amplified to the strength necessary to operate the mechanism necessary to make the impressions on the wax records. By this system any number of different sounds can be picked up and the volume of each regulated to the desired volume.

In sound-on-film recording, the sound waves translated into electrical energy by the microphone, are further translated into light waves, which affect the emulsion of the film in the usual photographic manner, creating light and dark areas along one side of the film. These areas (depending in their form upon whether the light-valve or oscillograph method of light translation has been used) represent the original sound waves in their light correlatives.

Rheostats

AN IMPORTANT item of projection equipment is the Rheostat. A rheostat may be described as a resistor provided with means for varying resistance (opposition). The resistance may be varied by having a contact lever or slider moved over a number of stationary buttons or segments between which sections of the rheostat are connected, by compressing a number of carbon or graphite disc or parts, by using a number of levers or knife-switches for cutting in and out resistance.

Safes, Box Office

THIS IS A SAFE anchored inside the box office into which the cashier may drop silver coins and bills as received from patrons beyond what is needed for purposes of making change. This type of safe has been developed as a result of the many "stick-ups" of theatre box offices in which the robber has obtained receipts running into several thousand dollars. It is widely used in several other trades, the idea, in brief, being that with this type of safe in the box office a theatre is likely to lose only the amount which it is keeping exposed for making change.

Box office safes are made of steel and provided with a slot into which surplus receipts are placed as received, or are equipped with a chute through which the surplus receipts may be dropped. Safes of this type usually make possible the lowest rates of burglary insurance.

Sanitary Specialties

THE THEATRE in its modern clothes, and to meet local health board regulations, must adopt a strict policy of sanitation. Such a policy encourages patronage and, what is just as important, it will eliminate complications with local authorities.

OFTENTIMES AN exhibtor is in need of someone to paint a front drop or curtain, or do some special building and painting of sets for a stage prologue. There are several reliable firms that make a specialty of this kind of work. They will design and decorate the set to suit the exhibitor's needs and often will recommend lighting combinations that will do a lot to increase the beauty of the set.

Schools

THEATRE MANAGEMENT and theatre organ playing are no longer hit-or-miss propositions. Both have become highly specialized. The theatre manager must be trained in administration duties, advertising and technics, and the organist must be able to dramatize the music to accompany the screen attractions. So valuable do chain organizations consider the trained man or woman that they are demanding those persons who have become skilled through graduate work in schools.

Screens

THERE ARE THREE types of screens for motion picture projection, metallic surfaced, white surfaced and beaded surfaced. Sound screens are perforated to permit the issuance of the sound waves from the horns behind.

The metallic surfaced screens are built in various finishes, from a smooth surface to a heavy pebbled surface. The smooth surfaced screen has perpendicular reflective characteristics, while the heavy pebbled surfaces somewhat diffuse the light. In wide houses, the best image is obtained on the latter type. Metallic surfaces, as a rule, are built to fit the requirements of each house.

Flat white or diffusing type screens in most cases are used with high intensity projection. Screen surfaces are made to meet the requirements of mazda, reflecting arc, regular arc and high intensity projection. Prices of screen range from 50 cents to $2 per square foot.

Screens for sound pictures are used with most sound apparatus. They differ from silent screens in that they are porous. When the horns are located behind the screen, a tightly woven canvas would retard or muffle the sound. These screens are perforated or otherwise made porous. Some are coated with a silver finish and are constructed to lace into a frame.

IN ORDER THAT the screen may be kept clean, and therefore give the best possible result in projection, a screen brush has been contrived for keeping the silver sheet clean and responsive to the image flashed from the projection room.

Screen Frames

AFTER ALL, THE picture's the thing, and without stability and solidity of the screen frame the picture is being shown at a disadvantage to both theatre owner and projectionists, to say nothing of the patron. Billowing of the screen is a blow to good projection. Now, too, there is the added element of the steel frame as another form of equipment development.

Screen Masks

LARGER SCREENS HAVE come into rather general vogue recently, due to the elaborate type of productions now being produced which, with the use of special lenses have enabled theatres to present outstanding scenes with greater effect and scope. The many opportunities to use the full screen to give added value to important scenes have brought about the development of the screen modifier, or mask which, automatically operated, permits framing of the screen at any desired size. The screen modifier, or mask, was first used in connection with sound-on-film to compensate for the sound on the edge of the film. This equipment is now being used in many other ways, especially in achieving ingenious opportunities for titles, announcements and special trailers.

Signs, Directional

TAKE THE CASE of a patron who comes from the auditorium and asks for directions. If the theatre owner has had this experience he realizes the embarrassment and other inconvenience. The patron is paying his way into the theatre and he deserves every consideration. The modern theatre today is equipping itself with the directional sign. Every business building is doing likewise.

Signs may be considered in two general groups—those that are illuminated and those which are etched on metal or wood without illumination. The illuminated signs, which are highly artistic in finish and construction, are made to read either from one side or both. The lettering in the signs is chipped into the glass and silvered, making it easy to read in daylight. The letters glow in a soft greenish color. Illumination is accomplished with 25-watt showcase lamps. Signs are fitted with lamps, cord and plug ready for attaching to light socket.

Signs—Electric

MOTION PICTURE theatres are dealers in the use of electrical advertising, the usual electric signs at some of the metropolitan houses being the most elaborate of their kind. Since the sign must necessarily be made with consideration for the size of the theatre facade and facilities for anchoring it, the matter is usually given individual consideration, and sketches prepared for the specific building to which the sign is to be fastened.

Slides

SLIDES ARE DIVIDED into four different classes: Song slides, advertising slides, announcement slides and special advertising slides. Song slides have come into vogue within the last few years. There are two types of these: The comedy type and the sentimental type. They are sold or rented in complete sets to be run in conjunction with organ solos. Advertising slides: These are of the stock advertising type in which may be inserted the name of the advertiser. There is a large selection for every line of business artistically drawn up and cleverly worded. Announcement slides: A standard stock selection makes it possible for the theatre man to buy already made any announcement that he desires to make. They can be secured in very artistic designs. Special advertising slides: Are those made from copy furnished by the advertiser from photographs, drawings or any other material the advertiser may have. In every case, they are made up specially. Prices for stock slides range from 25 cents up. Original slides cost from about a dollar, up.

Sound Equipment, Complete

MUSIC and sound reproducing devices are of two types, synchronous and non-synchronous. The latter use phonograph records, which are cued to the picture. The majority of these machines, which have from two to four discs for the records, are operated from the pit or other location in view of the screen. The synchronous type, however, is operated from the projection booth, employing disc records or film recordings made in conjunction with the picture. Non-synchronous instruments range in price from $275 up. The price range of synchronous equipment is quite wide, but may be said to be roughly from several hundred dollars to $10,000.

Non-synchronous equipment, however, has importance among motion picture theatre apparatus primarily as an augmentation of the synchronous sound equipment. The non-synchronous device is commonly installed along with the synchronous apparatus, in the same manner that public address systems are added to the regular sound layout. Incidental music not provided for in the regular screen program, and entertainment for the standees in the foyers, may be supplied by the non-synchronous equipment.

Among the developments in motion picture sound is the increase in the employment of the sound-on-film method of reproductoin. Experiment has eradicated many of the disadvantages of this method and increased its advantages, and as a result one producer, long committed exclusively to the use of the sound-on-disc method of recording, has taken measures for the adoption of the film method also. Installation of both sound-on-disc and sound-on-film reproducing equipment is thus recommended by authorities for theatres which in the early days of sound might have been advised to economize by installing disc equipment only.

Sound-Proofing

WITH A GROWING tendency on the part of theatre owners to incorporate into the theatre building additional recreational features, such as bowling alleys and ballrooms, the matter of sound-proofing has become a subject of wide interest.

In a great many instances, it has been shown that modern methods of sound-proofing make it possible to place a ballroom or bowling alley room either directly above or directly under a theatre auditorium with positive assurance that noise will not reach the auditorium and interfere with the audience enjoying the program.

Proper sound-proofing in such instances is an individual problem, due to the difference in building constructions, methods of ventilating, etc. The accomplishment is a matter of using proper design and materials based on years of successful installations. The system is based on proper breaking of solid contacts combined with proper absorbing mediums.

Hearing conditions in an auditorium can be provided for to a large extent in advance of construction from a study of the plans. Acoustical defects in existing auditoriums can also be diagnosed and corrective measures applied with satisfactory results.

Acoustic defects may be corrected by applying an efficient sound-absorbing material on walls or ceiling, as prescribed by a competent acoustical engineer. A number of efficient sound-absorbing materials are available, which may be elaborately decorated without reducing its efficiency.

In case a theatre auditorium is to be located in a large office building, the system can be used to prevent sound of pipe organs from penetrating to office spaces.

HORNS AND SPEAKERS used in sound installations are air columns with a belled outlet, or magnetic or electro-dynamic cones (in baffles or horns), used to project the sound waves created by the amplified electrical pulsations. They are attached to amplifiers and usually number two or more, depending on the size of the theatre.

Speed Indicators

SPEED INDICATOR — an electrical device with an indicator which can be located in the booth, on the orchestra director's table and in the manager's office, with the meters or speedometers attached to the picture machine to register at what rate of speed the film is being run through the machine. It indicates feet per minute and also may show minutes per thousand feet. In modern theatres where the performances are run on a schedule with everything synchronized, speed indicators are a necessity. Prices range from $15 a unit, up. Generators extra.

SYNCROFILM

Because it produces the illusion of reality. The actors' voices sound as the public expects them to. SYNCROFILM has been engineered to produce this.

SYNCROFILM has been designed with the following ideas in mind. Perfect reproduction, simplicity, ease of operation and low cost. That we have approached these ideals is proven by the fact that SYNCROFILM is third in the American field, and first in many foreign countries.

SYNCROFILM Sound Heads are built with the precision of a fine watch, and as rugged as your projector.

SYNCROFILM is fully A. C. operated. Amplifier is equipt with frequency control which can be adjusted to overcome acoustical defects in your theatre.

We have also considered your Projectionist. It is easily and quickly threaded and gives him more time to put the show over.

Stage Scenery and Draperies

DRAPERIES ARE an important feature of theatres today. They accent color and give softness and richness to an interior. Architectural lines of doorways and archways are usually distinctively hard and draperies are the mediums by which these lines are softened to give a pleasing appearance. A drapery scheme usualy creates an inviting, soft and colorful atmosphere. If the drapery is in harmony with the main color in the surroundings and in proportion to the richness of the architecture there need be little worry about it being too rich or elaborate. Likewise, scenery, colorful and delicate, has become an important adjunct to the motion picture theatre. Scenery to properly clothe the stage show must be of a type which is eye-catching the moment the drop is raised. Many specialists have been developed in this particular field. Acoustical treatment is also quite closely allied with draping for color effect and harmony. Up-to-date scenic specialists have made a close study of draping for acoustical correction, and today, of course, acoustics are an all-important consideratoin in stage and house drapery installations.

Statuary

ARTISTRY OF decoration in a theatre is reflected never more vividly and accurately than by the statuary. A dignified and beautiful statue at the head of the stairs leading to the mezzanine, for example, can establish the tone of a theatre almost as rapidly and conclusively as the construction.

Stereopticons

STEREOPTICONS are used for the projection of lantern slides and effects, illumination being supplied by incandescent or arc lamps. They are made in single units and also for double and triple dissolving. Many unusual effects are possible with the modern stereopticon as developed for theatre use. They can be obtained for as low as $26.00 for Mazda type.

Sweeping Compound

THERE are a number of these on the market, many of which are very efficient. They are made from a composition impregnated with oil so that in sweeping the theatre very little dust is raised. These compounds also have in them disinfecting material which disinfects the floor as it is swept.

They come in 75-lb. drums, 100 lb., 200-lb. and 300-lb. barrels.

Switchboards

CONTROL OF LIGHTING through the use of switchboards makes possible the wonderful lighting effects achieved in motion picture theatres today. Switchboards for this work are built in many capacities. Scenes for unusual lighting effects may be pre-selected by such a board and the theatre flooded with appropriate lighting scheme at a proper cue by the simple method of throwing a switch. Lighting control systems are being adopted by theatres of lesser size that heretofore have considered such installations as being only for the larger metropolitan houses.

Manufacturers of this type of equipment are glad to furnish engineering service and consult with exhibitors and architects on various phases of these lighting control systems.

A new device for automatic and pre-set control of stage and house lighting has recently been developed. The principle is very similar to that employed in the playing of pipe organ music and may be operated manually or automatically from the player roll. Novel and spectacular effects are thus produced with the possibility of synchronization with the program.

Switches

NEVER in the history of the theatre has electrical equipment played as vital a role as it does today. From projection room to stage and to manager's office, electricity to a large extent runs the show. With the program on a minute schedule, electrical switches in turn have an important duty to perform.

Temperature Control Apparatus

TEMPERATURE control apparatus are devices for automatically controlling the temperature of the auditorium, organ chambers or any part of the theatre where a uniform heat must be maintained. In a control for an auditorium the device is a small thermostat, which actuates a valve on an air-line, which in turn operates the shutters in the air ducts. In the average size theatre several of these will be located at various places and each will operate independently of the other, thus relieving hot or cold spots in any one section. Controls for organ chambers turn on or off electric heaters and also work on the thermostatic principle.

TWO PRIMARY factors in promotional work of a theatre, as far as paper is concerned, are quality production and speed of service. ### Tickets

THEATRE TICKETS are available and used in many forms as roll tickets, folded tickets, reserved seat tickets, and ticket coupon books. Roll and folded tickets of the more usual denominations are carried in stock. Tickets are commonly sold in even multiples of 10,000, the price decreasing with additional thousands ordered.

Tickets are made for use with ticket issuing machines and are consecutively numbered. This enables accurate check of tickets sold for each day. Stock tickets may be obtained for 50 cents a roll. Special printed roll or center hole folded tickets range in price from $8 for 10,000 to $158 for a million. The admission price must be printed on each ticket, by order of the government.

Ticket Booths

KEEPING PACE with advancement in theatre design the box office has been developed from a rather unsightly necessity to a thing of beauty, modernly equipped for speedy and accurate sale of tickets. It is usually designed in harmony with the architectural scheme of the theatre.

Attractive booths are made of plastic composition or wood. Others are made of cast brass or bronze with marble bases.

While larger theatres require several box offices one of these is always placed as near the sidewalk as possible. This procedure is usually followed where only one box office is used also, thus placing the ticket window within easy access.

Tile (for Floors and Decoration)

IMPORTANCE OF first impressions has been repeated often enough, yet many a patron has drawn a negative reaction toward a beautiful theatre because insufficient attention has been paid to the appearance of the lobby. The usages of decorative tile in the theatre are many and valuable. Besides its use for fountains and purely decorative features, it is proved beautifying as well as durable as floor material in theatre lobbies, lounges, etc.

Uniforms

THEATRE PRESTIGE emphasized through the training of ushers, doormen and other attendants, is greatly enhanced by costumes worn by such employees.

Uniforms for Summer wear should be of a lightweight material to provide comfort and in addition, to create an atmosphere of coolness. Uniforms for the Winter months should be of a heavier material of a dark color.

Many theatres at present are making it a practice of equipping ushers, etc., in a style that harmonizes with the architecture of the house. For example, a theatre done in a Spanish style very frequently adopts a Spanish type of uniform for house employees.

Uniforms should be made to individual measurements to assure perfect fit and neatness at all times. Special catalogues are available containing appropriate suggestions for theatre attendants' uniforms.

Upholstery Material

USE OF SOUND absorbing upholstering on theatre seats has come into popular demand since the advent of sound pictures. A popular fabric used in this connection is mohair, which combines beauty with important sound properties. Upholstering material of this nature may be obtained in a variety of colors and executed in interesting patterns and designs. It is claimed for this material that it will not fade, does not mat down, and can be kept fresh and clean with little effort. Use of mohair for upholstering is said to produce a marked elimination of reverberations in the theatre auditorium.

Usher Signal Systems

THE USHER SIGNAL SYSTEM provides a sending station at each aisle, equipped with numeral push buttons that give any total of seats that aisle might have. The usher registers on this station the number of vacant seats available, which information is transmitted to the floor or head usher, depending on the size of the theatre. In the larger houses the floor usher relays the information to the head usher. The head usher sends total of all aisles and floors to the doorman who directs the people to the different sections of the house where the vacant seats are waiting. This operation goes on continuously, and rapidly takes care of waiting crowds. The various stations can be furnished in any finish.

Seat indicators have proved to effect economy and safety in moving picture theatres by reducing the possibility of accidents in aisles and rows to its minimum, reducing the numbers of ushers used in handling patrons, together with speeding up the locating of vacant seats which are otherwise lost due to the inaccuracy of the human element manifested in the very best of ushering systems. The reduction of accidents means reduction in insurance premiums, and the reduction in the number of ushers means a reduction in uniforms, salaries and up-keep.

Vacuum Cleaning Equipment

THOUGH THE constant and careful cleaning of the interior of a theatre would seem to present a problem, the vacuum cleaner has simplified matters considerably, since it can be used in cleaning carpets, drapes, chairs, organ lofts, stage floors, etc. The vacuum cleaner also promotes sanitation, which old methods did not do. Vacuum cleaners are procurable for theatres of all sizes and are priced nominally when consideration is taken of their efficiency and labor saving.

Cleaners may be purchased for as low as $67.50.

bilities for extra revenue through the use of vending machines and other merchandising ideas.

One large circuit which has recently installed candy vending machines and weighing scales in some 600 theatres has made a careful analysis of possible revenue from such sources and reveal an expected income of between $400,000 and $500,000 annually. Their survey shows that an average of one out of every thirteen persons attending a theatre will patronize a vending machine. According to figures from various theatres, candy vending machines have produced from $50 per month upward, each. Many theatres have found room for three or more machines.

While candy machines are considered the largest revenue producers, it has been found that weighing scales located in rest rooms and other convenient spots run a close second. Weighing machines that take up a minimum amount of room, are attractively made in various colors and which can easily be moved on rollers are now offered especially for theatre use.

Vending machines of all types may be purchased outright or may be placed in theatres and operated on a percentage of the profits for the theatre. Other types of vending machines such as soap, towel, perfume, and the like, are beginning to make their appearance in some theatres. Pop corn machines, which are discussed elsewhere in this Index, offer another source of revenue under certain conditions.

Following are listed some manufacturers of vending machines and scales:

Advance Machine Company, 4641 Ravenswood Avenue, Chicago, Ill.
The American Vending Company, 39 S. LaSalle Street, Chicago, Ill.
Automatic Canteen Company, 155 W. Austin Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Ventilators

PROPER DISTRIBUTION of air in the theatre is an important feature of correct ventilation. One of the methods of achieving this is through the use of ventilators located in the auditorium floor. Air brought into the theatre is distributed in this manner to all parts of the house. Ventilators of this type which are generally known as mushroom ventilators, may be adjusted to permit the desired amount of air entering the auditorium. It is claimed that diffusers of this type enable an evenly distributed amount of air to reach all portions of the building. The prices range from 50c. to $1.50 each, depending on the diameter. A six-inch diameter is generally used.

American Metal Products Company, 5855 Manchester Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.
Knowles Mushroom Ventilator Company, 41 N. Moore Street, New York City.
Sobel & Kraus, Inc., 517-21 E. 136th Street, New York City.

Volume Controls, Auditorium

CONTROL OF SOUND and talking volume from a point in the auditorium so that the volume of sound will harmonize with the action of the picture is a recent development that is finding a favorable reception among theatre owners. The purpose of the auditorium volume control is to enable instantaneous change in sound volume, to enhance the mood of the particular scene at the moment it is shown. Heretofore, with the volume of sound controlled from the projection room, a flexibility has been absent, which has had a tendency to produce a monotony in the sound from the amplifiers, regardless of the action on the screen.

With the auditorium volume control, it is possible to tone and shade the sound directly at the point it is received by the audience, viz., in the auditorium.

Waste Cans

THESE GENERALLY have self closing covers, some of them being operated by foot levels. Some are finished in high-grade enamel to harmonize with the rest of the booth equipment, while others are made of galvanized iron. Some types are also water tight, so they will hold water to extinguish carbon butts or the immersion of film fragments in water for safety.

E. E. Fulton Company, 1018 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

General Equipment News and Comment

POSTER MAKING DEVICE

● A new lantern for the projection of images from opaque surfaces has been developed by The Postoscope Company of Beatrice, Neb. Such projectors are used to throw the likeness of a printed picture on compo-board, or other drawing surface, at any desired size so that a poster artist need but trace the projected outlines, filling in according to the original sketch.

The Postoscope consists in a pressed steel lamp housing measuring 17½ inches high, 9 inches wide, and 9¾ inches from back to back. It is finished inside and out in non-reflecting black baked enamel. Outside finish is black crystal. Ventilation is provided by louvres at both top and bottom.

CHAIR ANCHOR

● A new improved theatre chair anchor consisting of an especially long tapered fin-head bolt, conical cup, 1-inch long lead sleeve, washer and hexagon nut, has been placed on the market by the Chicago Expansion Bolt Company. The bolt is set head downward into the hold. A setting tool, which is a hollow piece of rod, is slipped over the bolt against the washer, and when driven with a few blows of a hammer, expands the conical cup which spreads out, increasing the diameter of the head of the bolt to the absolute diameter of the hole and thereby allowing no lead to be driven past the head of the bolt, and at the same time, expands the lead sleeve into every crevice in the concrete.

The bolts come packed 100 to the box—and are completely assembled, with the exception of the nuts, which are placed in a separate envelope inside the box. Assembling the bolts in this fashion without the nuts, it is calculated—saves time in installation. After the bolt is securely set in the concrete, the hole in the chair leg is placed over the bolt, and the nuts are screwed down firmly.

PROGRAM SERVICE

● An editorial and printing service for supplying theatres with programs, pluggers and house organs has been established by the Showman's Press of Chicago. Experienced advertising and publicity writers, together with artists and layout specialists, prepare the programs or house organs combining programs, for regular delivery. The theatre has considerable latitude as to type of copy desired.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

I AM PLANNING on building a new theatre. I have a lot 60 feet wide and 160 feet deep. There is an alley to the right of the lot and an alley at the rear. I want a 700-seat house, all on one floor. Do I have to take off space for an exit court to the left of the lot, or do you think that I could get by with exits to the right opening into the alley. How many entrance doors do I have to provide?

I would like to have a store room on each side of the center lobby. Could I have those stores at least 20 feet wide? Do you think I could have the stores 40 feet deep?

I do not care for a stage. I would like to know if an 18-foot apron would do? I also want to have two small apartments on the second floor.

Do you think terrazzo floors are nice for lobby and toilet rooms? I want to keep the cost down as much as possible. I would like to get away from painting the auditorium floor. What would be the cheapest and best method, something that would last in place of paint? Is acoustical plaster very expensive and would it improve the sound? Could you give me some idea how much attraction boards would cost for the marquee? I want them about 8 feet high, with the name on top and three lines of changeable letters. The marquee should project about 14 feet from the building, as that is the width of the sidewalk.

Would it be advisable to place the ticket booth outside of the front doors or inside the lobby, and if I place it outside, how far should I have to place the entrance doors back from the front of the building? I am eagerly looking forward to the next issue of the BETTER THEATRES and hope you will have these questions answered in that issue. Thank you very much for your information.—S. H. C.

The Answer:

YOUR LOT is large enough for a 700-seat theatre. An alley to the right and the rear of the theatre will be sufficient, and an exit court to the left will not be necessary. The theatre code of your state requires not less than three exits for a capacity up to 700, so if you place one exit in each side wall near the stage, and one at the rear in the sidewall to the right, you will have complied with the code. However, the aggregate width of said exit doors should be 21 feet. If you make each exit opening 6 feet wide you will have to use one door of your entrance doors as an exit, giving you 24 feet of aggregate exits. In this case you should have at least three sets of entrance doors, making the width of the lobby 20 feet. Adding to this the thickness of walls and width of stairway to apartments, you will have 32 feet for stores, which will make each store 16 feet wide. You can have a depth of 40 feet for each store. However, you will have to provide a secondary means of exit in the rear of the stores, so I think you had better place the stores side by side, and the lobby to the left of the building. A width of 18 feet for the apron will be sufficient.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

Terrazzo floors are cheaper than tile floors. A nice design can be obtained by inserting brass expansion joints, making an all-over pattern, preferably with color. By providing colored floor hardening in the finish coat of your concrete floor you can get away from painting. That process also makes the floor dust-proof. The cost of acoustical plaster is not very great. The material costs more than ordinary plaster, but labor cost for application is about the same. It is absolutely necessary, however, to provide for some kind of sound-absorbing material, and acoustical plaster, properly applied, might be adequate in your case.

The price of attraction boards varies a great deal, depending upon material used. You should be able to get some nice attraction boards, with about 300 changeable letters, for from $2,500 to $3,000. By all means place your box office outside of the front entrance, as the average person will buy more readily at the sidewalk than when necessary to enter a lobby to obtain a ticket. (You know, one may change his mind if one has to go inside.) In this case the entrance doors should be set back at least 12 feet from the face of the building.

The Question:

THE THEATRE in which I work is for sale, at a price of $18,000. I maintain that a theatre can be built which would be very much superior to this one, as this one is a remodeled building, more or less "thrown together." Personally, I would not give $5,000 for it.

I told my boss this, and he claims that a theatre can not be built for $18,000. I would like to have you settle the argument by giving a brief idea as to how good a theatre can be built for this amount.—K. K. D.

The Answer:

TO ANSWER your inquiry I should have been given a more complete description, such as the amount of seats, size of theatre, whether there is a balcony or not, and if there are any stores, so that I could make a fair comparison.

Of course $18,000 is a rather small sum with which to build a theatre. However, it has been done. At the present time a theatre can be built for a minimum amount of about 17c per cubic foot, provided it is very plain. Of course, no equipment is included. Built for $18,000, a theatre would have about 105,000 cubic feet contents, and as no auditorium ceiling should be less than 20 feet in height, it would have a limit of 5,000 square feet for floor space, making the floor plan about 40x125 feet.

If we allow 12 feet for apron, 20 feet from screen to first row of seats, 8 feet for foyer, and 20 feet for lobby and rest rooms, you will have approximately 75 feet for seats, which will allow for 30 rows of chairs 2 feet 6 inches back to back. The auditorium being 40 feet wide, assuming a center bank of eleven 20-inch seats with one 4-foot aisle on each side, and side banks of three seats each, the capacity would be about 500 seats, so it is possible under present conditions, with economy as the principal watchword, for a 500-seat theatre to be built for $18,000.

This price, of course, does not include architect's commission, decorating, marquee, attraction board, poster cabinets, ticket booth, seats, carpets, electric light fixtures, projection booth and other equipment, but if the design is carefully studied and economy used, a very nice little theatre would be the result.

Keeping the Theatre Fit to Prosper—Proper Inspection

touching will do away with one or two small spots where the paint has started to peel. If such is the case, you should fix it up as quick as you discover it. No lobby is going to look right with paint peeling off the walls or ceiling. You'd be surprised how a little care will keep a place looking spic and span.

The auditorium is where your patrons spend the greatest portion of their time after buying a ticket. And it is here that your eagle eye should be focussed to see that everything for their comfort and convenience has not been overlooked or permitted to fall into disrepair and neglect. When were those wall brackets and hanging pictures last cleaned? If your house uses the crystal style of fixtures, then you must know how often they require an ammonia-water cleaning. Any other style requires plenty of attention, too—especially those fixtures hung close to the ceiling and of the inverted type, on which dust and dirt seem to accumulate like magic. But like everything else without constant care and attention, they will soon spoil the entire general effect of your auditorium through becoming dirty and dead-looking.

Seats should be inspected by the house manager not less than once a month for loose standards, broken parts and upholstery. But the janitor and cleaners should keep watch on them every day and immediately report to the manager every broken or loose seat so that it may be fixed at once. To permit a loose seat to go without repair may mean that the entire row will soon become loose, causing not only accidents but costly repairs by expensive mechanics.

The recovering of torn upholstery through wear or vandalism is another detail that must not be neglected. Smart managers keep a goodly supply of covering always on hand. One of the house help should be trained in recovering seats, and reserved seats kept in readiness for changing as fast as a torn seat is reported.

Resulphuring of standards may sound like a complicated job, but if you are so located that it is an expensive proposition for expert seat repair men to get to your theatre, then you may find it well worth while to have your handy man become acquainted with this type of work. Ditto for tightening of the different chair parts. But while on this subject, it may be well to caution you against letting your seats get into too bad a condition without getting regular seat men on the job about once a year for a complete house check-up of all seats. In this way you cut down the cost, and they leave the house in such a condition that your handy man can easily keep them in shape until the next annual inspection by the seat men.

CARPETS, once they start showing wear, can cause more grief than all the seats put together. Carpets generally start at the seams at the head of the aisles. Here is where you have probably patched and patched until you dread to hear another report about more patching being required.

Where carpets have been fastened down in the aisles by means of drilled holes with wooden plugs, they can be lifted, the worn part cut away and the entire aisle strip shifted to the top, where your local carpet man can sew it to the main carpets and stretch it while being relaid. But never permit a worn or torn bit of carpet to go along with the prayer that something may never happen. Besides the deadly effect on appearances, you can find yourself deep in trouble by reason of such neglect and involve your theatre into many lawsuits through accidents.

Let's duck out of the auditorium for a while and slip into the lounges. Here is where you are supposed to give your patrons an opportunity to freshen up and relax, and where they can quickly form a personal opinion of you and your theatre. Failure to provide the usual items for convenience of those patrons is a sure sign that you are not operating a first-rate house. Yet the difference between furnishing and providing proper equipment in these rooms, and forgetting about them, amounts to very little in dollars and cents.

Try to have these rooms well ventilated and neat at all times. In the women's lounge some freshly cut flowers not only lend the proper note to the general surroundings but show a thoughtfulness which is far more appreciated by your feminine patrons than you could ever hear about. There is no question that to keep a theatre in good operating condition you must spend money. But if that money is well spent, it keeps your equipment and house in good shape and permits you to offer your community a theatre which it will be proud of and be glad to patronize. You are spending money wisely. Totaled up at the end of a year, the full amount spent will probably come to less than an elaborate campaign on some individual attraction, yet to cater to your public you must have something more than an attraction. After they buy a ticket they expect to find your theatre comfortable, clean and stimulating.

So the rule of spending for economy can be carried into every corner of your house. The projection room, where a projectionist with a mistaken idea of duty may permit his equipment to get into bad condition and cause expensive and troublesome breakdowns. The ventilating and heating plants, which can develop plenty of trouble and expense for you if not properly watched and taken care of. The roofs, where a little neglect can cause a complete (and tremendously expensive) redecorating job through a leak that might have been fixed long before it started to find its way into the ceiling auditorium.

There is no single portion of any theatre, or what goes to make up the theatre, that can stand neglect. Every item must at some time or other be inspected, and if found faulty, repaired or replaced. Dividing up the theatre into any number of parts and placing some responsible employe in charge of watching his particular part will result in getting small things to your attention for repairs long before they become big and expensive. Then, by making periodical personal inspections over the various parts, you keep yourself in close and intimate touch with everything.

Keeping the Theatre Fit to Prosper—Your Sound Equipment

impregnate the cotton covering of wires.

Impaired insulation resulting from prolonged or excessive heat may show up in noisy sound or may lead to a short circuit and complete breakdown. The effects of heat will be found in the vicinity of vacuum tubes—especially where these are enclosed and inadequately ventilated. The vicinity of rheostats, resistances, transformers or inductive windings which may carry heavy currents is also subject to the effects of heat, especially when enclosed or not adequately ventilated. Apparatus located immediately above any of these possible sources of excessive heating may be seriously affected although only indirectly involved.

Heat-baked insulation should be replaced, even if this necessitates replacing much wiring, or many condensers and coils. Timely replacement is less expensive than breakdown. Recurrence of the same trouble should be guarded against by careful meter-check to insure that the heating experienced is not due to unnecessarily heavy current and by the addition of ventilating holes where these seem in order; in extreme cases a small electric fan may be played on the equipment during hours of prolonged operation.

The effects of vibration, dirt and heat upon individual portions of equipment should need no additional mention under those headings; the effect of physical wear and friction is almost entirely confined to the driving mechanism and the appropriate precautions are obvious. In connection with the separate parts of the system, therefore, it would seem desirable to attempt to describe some possibilities of definite improvement, rather than to particularize upon those routine practices of investigation and rehabilitation which have already been suggested in outline.

II

Parts of the Sound System

The Drives

SEVERAL IMPROVEMENTS in driving mechanism are now both possible and consistent with the most rigid economy. Competition in gears, chains, etc., has been reasonably lively, and in consequence the cost of replacement items of that kind, for most systems, has been so drastically reduced that waiting for the last possible moment to make needed repairs, with the attendant risk of breakdown, will in not a few cases take on something of the likeness of extravagance.

In connection with some systems, improved construction of the driving mechanism has also been achieved. In some of the forms of some drives, an entire unit formerly had to be replaced whenever a single cogged wheel needed changing. That sort of thing has to a considerable extent been eliminated, not infrequently through the efforts and inventiveness of independent machine shops and gear works. Very often today a drive unit can be so rebuilt as to permit of individual replacement of worn parts in the future; such rebuilding is palpably desirable and in the best interests of intelligent economy.

Among the improvements that have been made possible in connection with drive problems, new types of belts and chains are available, lasting longer and affording greater security against interruption. Some forms of the latter, in addition, reduce vibration and so pay for themselves merely by prolonging the life of other parts. Another defence against some of the effects of vibration, and a thoroughly desirable accessory, is a take-up sprocket for those sound systems that did not originally include one. Special forms of take-up, generally conceded to be less troublesome and more trustworthy than the standard devices, are likewise available and in most cases are desirable.

Reproduction Systems

A number of improvements are often possible in connection with sound-on-film and one new one, not yet officially announced, may possibly have been made public before these lines appear in print. Quality can often be refined, especially in the matter of high-frequency response, by readjustment or re-building of the exciter optical system. In the case of some of the earlier forms of sound installation replacement of the lens assembly by one of more recent design may work something in the nature of a near-miracle with the quality of reproduction.

Noise and other disturbances heard in sound-on-film can often be reduced or cured entirely by use of the most modern types of photo-cells. These cells have very little "rush," or hiss, in their action. Their output is so much stronger than that of earlier types that less amplification is needed, with proportionately reduced opportunities for noise to creep in. For both these reasons, the modern cells give markedly better sound, but their use is also justified on grounds of economy. They are of extremely long life. In fact, it is not yet certain just how long they may be expected to last. The few years they have been in use have not yielded sufficient data for a final answer upon that point.

Non-microphonic vacuum tubes should be installed in photoelectric cell amplifiers not so equipped. The difference in cost is very small. The difference in sound is audible even to the hard-of-hearing.

There are few recent improvements in sound-on-disc reproduction that are now available for theatre use. Improved forms of microphones can be had, including the highly sensitive and accurate condenser microphone (now somewhat superseded by even more delicate and accurate transmitters) but the average theatre will have little commercial need for such refined devices. A greater number of ordinary microphones, however, may be desirable in not a few cases, especially in connection with vaudeville or singing organists.

Switches, Faders, Etc.

Newer and still more reliable forms of rheostats, switches and other controls are brought out almost daily. Theatres experiencing trouble with those portions of their equipment may find surprisingly improved articles at depression prices in the catalogues of appropriate manufacturers. Improved "self-cleaning" and "non-grooving" forms of fader and other contact fingers are available for some types of equipment, and are decidedly worth having.

Amplifiers

There are few improvements that can be added to present-day amplifiers. The latest tubes are generally more sturdily built than earlier models, and are somewhat more inclined toward filaments of the type that is susceptible to rejuvenation: early types of filter condensers should, in some systems, be replaced by later, safer types, the expense being small, and much more than justified by the reduction in risk to other parts of the amplifier. Existing amplifiers, however, are generally at a high level of satisfactory performance, and so do not often offer room for striking improvements.

This is not the case, however, where additional amplification is needed. The new, direct-coupled circuit, although it may be neither particularly preferable or the reverse, from the point of view of performance, is extremely inexpensive when compared with all older forms. A large portion of the apparatus necessary to the operation of the conventional amplifier is not included or needed, and the new product is consequently smaller and lighter, as well as more reasonably priced. Any theatre needing more amplification, or better quality in amplification, and not limited in its purchases by contractual obligations, should give the direct-coupled amplifier every attention.

Power Supply

The later, all-a.c. type sound systems, present no important power problems, but the earlier, battery-powered equipments continue to require either (a) periodic replacement of storage batteries, (b) installation of reasonably "permanent" storage batteries, or (c) conversion to socket-power operation by means of rectifiers or motor-generators. This last possibility has been further complicated very recently by the introduction for projector supply of three-phase rectifiers. The output of these instruments is capable, without further filtering, of supplying many or most of the direct current requirements of any sound system.

Keeping the Theatre Fit to Prosper—Maintenance Values

combines their consideration with a consideration of other forms of renovation. However, that weatherstripping, the lack of which caused your consternation during the March winds, may easily be forgotten until your patrons remind you by their absence in the fall that your selective judgment has been lacking.

Without doubt illumination is of primary importance, not in its quantity, but in its degree, its ratio and its quality. Within the theatre, illumination is effected by means of lighting fixtures or by concealed bulbs and reflecting surfaces. Concealed illumination may be varied in quantity, but usually can not be readily altered without performing a more or less major operation. This is not true of fixtures, and these may be changed at will. This is one form of renovation that is easily arranged, is usually not too costly, and is markedly effective. If done in part, changes should be complete within a given space or room, except that orchestra and side wall brackets may be changed at will if the change is not too marked in its relation to the remaining fixtures. This form of renovation is especially desirable because great advances have been made of recent years in the design of lighting fixtures.

No discussion of renovation would be complete without reference to the setting of the picture, presupposing that your picture has been properly enlarged in conformity with the trend of the times, and that you have correspondingly increased the illumination in your lamphouses and provided the necessary auxiliaries of wire and equipment to make this possible. Fixed sets, wooden tormentors and drapes and painted canvas are out of line with present tendencies, and in the average theatre patronage will welcome a change. Selection of proper fabrics for their ability to hold their shape, their finish and color is desirable in that it permits the elimination of lining. Selection of plain folded design with level bottoms and possibly applique for ornament is economical and modern, and is usually as effective as festooned and tasseled draperies, and has the added value that it does not distract the attention from the picture it frames. The proper disposition and degree of illumination of the picture set also permit the choice of cheaper and plainer fabrics.

In general, the foregoing also holds true so far as house drapes are concerned, but here changes are less often necessary and often recourse may be had to cleaning and dyeing to create a change.

TO SOME EXTENT the opera chair may be considered an item of display, but its main object is utilitarian and its effect on the comfort of the patron often measures the difference between the sale of the product of the theatre or its rejection. No compromise whatever should be permitted in the maintenance of that chair. In any expenditure you make in the rehabilitation of your theatre think of the audience, which sits with varying degrees of patience for two hours or more on one restricted spot. You are unfortunate if the spacing of your rows are too close and the seat too narrow, and you must wait until income permits or sales become so low as to compel you to alter that arrangement. However, lessened expenditures may improve a harsh situation if new seats (bottoms) are secured, and in many instances this compromise has been too long delayed. In the selection of fabrics some thought should be given to their sound-absorption qualities, as it is now generally recognized that empty seats have a marked effect upon reproduction. In this year of grace your opera chair expenditure may be limited, so let us hope you have built up your display to secure your patron and properly selected your shows to hold him.

Reproduction, the primary instrument of the theatre, may be broadly divided into two divisions, namely the picture and the sound. The picture should be as large as possible considering the limits of the theatre, and its illumination should be built up to correspond. If necessity has not already compelled, now is the time to do it, since the day of the postage stamp picture is over. Naturally only the best in screens should be selected if a new one is purchased, and it should then be properly protected by a similar backing with gaps for horns only. If the present screen is satisfactory as to size it should be perfect in cleanliness and condition.

Audiences may and will tolerate or even enjoy a picture of minimum dimension. They will not and should not tolerate faulty pictures and sound, and the necessity of giving them what they are entitled to is not dictated by competition but rather by the education of the patronage in what they may reasonably expect.

Each operator therefore is individually charged with an obligation which he should in no wise seek to shirk, else his negligence may catch him before returning prosperity has had its opportunity to embrace him. No selection at variance with final results can hope to ameliorate his situation, as respects illumination and sound.

Sound applies not only to the reproduction of the actual voices, music and noises that help to convey the illusion of reality in the product, but also to that quality within the theatre that assists or hinders the illusion by proper absorption or uncontrollable reverberation. This latter aspect of sound has received considerable study in the last several years, and today many engineers are well fitted to analyze conditions and recommend solutions with a fair measure of success. Final solution of this problem rests with the engineer, but the operator may often experiment with the disposition of draperies or simple wall coverings and hangings with a fair degree of success. In this way only can selection as it applies to sound be condoned.

Problems of selection are therefore dictated not only by money available, but by competitive activity; not only by the sophistication of the patronage, but by its temperament as well.

What boots it, if we satisfy ourselves but fail to satisfy our judges? It costs them nothing in cash and little thought or feeling to turn thumbs down and seek their pleasures elsewhere. Their disrespect for a given theatre can easily exceed their desire to advantage themselves by what it offers. It is well to admit that they must be urged to attend and their continuance nurtured by giving them those things they have a right to expect.

Decisions in Theatre Cases

owner to recover damages and proved that the latter had customarily permitted patrons, at various times, to descend by means of the ladder, instead of utilizing the stairs in the theatre building. Although it was not proved that the boy, who caused the ladder to descend and strike the patron, actually had been a patron of the theatre, yet the higher court held the theatre owner liable in the amount of $1,000 damages to the patron, and said:

"It would seem that the erection of any kind of contrivance or apparatus over the heads of pedestrians in any way except in an absolutely stationary manner is bound to be classified as dangerous and a constant menace. . . . It was proved that defendant's (theatre owner's) fire escape was constructed in accordance with plans and specifications approved by the state fire marshal and strict compliance with the law. . . . It must be borne in mind that the law, neither directly nor indirectly, provides that in the construction of fire escapes they shall be built so as to descend upon sidewalks and streets, or that the last section shall consist of a drop ladder suspended horizontally in mid-air in such cases. . . . Streets and sidewalks are primarily and essentially maintained for travel thereon, and ordinarily a municipality cannot grant such a use of a street as makes it dangerous and unsafe, and any object in the street or sidewalk, under it or over it, which without notice or warning to the public is likely to cause injury to a person using the street or sidewalk, is certainly negligently maintained."

Legal Status in Sub-Hire

A THEATRE owner, or other employer, is liable in damages for an injury sustained by an employe, as a result of negligence on the part of the employer or his authorized employe. However, considerable discussion has existed from time to time whether or not an employer is liable for an injury sustained by his employe while the latter performs service or work for another. Generally speaking, the employer is liable if his employe remains under his control and direction during the sub-employment. However, if the person who hires the employe assumes full control over such employe, the hirer is personally liable and the original employer is relieved.

For illustration, in the late case of McComas v. Al G. Barnes Shows Company, (4 P. [2d] 997), it was disclosed that the Barnes Company was the owner of an elephant which, with its trainer at an agreed daily compensation, were rented to William Fox Studios for use in shooting a motion picture film. While the film was being made an actress named Lila McComas was seriously injured. She filed suit against the Barnes Company for damages. The lower court refused to instruct the jury as follows:

"Where a general employe is so loaned or hired to another and is subject wholly to the direction and control of the other, the latter, and not the general employer, is the master, so far as the particular or special service is concerned, and is liable for injuries caused by the negligent and wrongful acts of the servant, while engaged in the duties pertaining to such services."

Therefore, the jury of the lower court held the Barnes Company liable. The latter company appealed to the higher Court on the contention that the William Fox Studios should be liable, and introduced evidence tending to prove that the injury was sustained as a result of negligence on the part of the elephant trainer, and also that the trainer was at the time when the accident occurred subject wholly to the direction and control of the Fox corporation. In upholding this contention and in reversing the lower court's verdict, the higher court said:

"In principle, the authorities indicate that the instruction offered by defendant (Barnes Company) and refused by the lower court is a correct statement of the law . . . and that, in the instant case, it should have been given to the jury."

INTERPRETATION OF CONTRACT

IT IS WELL established law that an ambiguous clause in a contract generally is construed in favor of the party who has expended money or otherwise endeavored in good faith to fulfill the terms of the agreement. This point of the law is applicable to all kinds of agreements, such as film rental contracts, employment contracts, lease contracts, etc.

For instance, in Motion Picture Advertising Company v. Capelle, (137 So. 877), it was disclosed that a retail merchant named Capelle entered into a written contract to pay a theatre owner the sum of $450 for exhibition of an advertising film a specified period in a motion picture theatre. The contract was made in duplicate and the copy which was retained by Capelle had an ink line written through the word "cancellation" in the clause "This order is not subject to cancellation" which altered the clause to read "This order is not subject to" which, of course, is not intelligible.

Later Capelle refused to pay the balance due on the contract and suit was filed to collect the same. Capelle contended that he should not be held liable because it was verbally agreed that he should be permitted to cancel the contract at any time he desired to do so and that the ink line drawn through the word "cancellation" verified this statement. However, the higher court refused to render a judgment in favor of Capelle, and said:

"The copy of the contract upon which this suit is brought contains no modification of the printed words giving defendant (Capelle) the right to cancel it before the end of the term contract for, and defendant's copy simply deletes the word 'cancellation,' thus destroying the sense of the provision without giving right to cancel."

PAYMENT BY CHECK

AN IMPORTANT rule is that a valid purchase of merchandise, from one who has legal title, entitles the purchaser to legal title, although the seller desires to rescind the contract of sale. This rule of the law is applicable in all instances where fraud, deceit or misrepresentation is not involved in the contract of sale, irrespective whether the seller refuses to accept payment.

For example, in the late case of Parma v. Cameron, (37 S. W. [2d] 274), it was shown that a person purchased certain merchandise and gave the seller his check in payment for the full value of the goods. However, the seller failed to deposit the check and, in subsequent litigation, the seller contended that the sale was invalid because he failed to cash the check. However, it is interesting to observe that the higher court held the sale valid and enforceable, and said:

"The general rule is that in cash sales of personal property, where a check is given for the purchase price, the sale is only conditional, and title does not pass to the purchaser unless and until the check is paid. If payment of such check is refused, the seller may reclaim his property, provided he acts promptly. But, in the instant case, payment of the check was never refused. Failure to present it for payment, or to ascertain that it had not been presented, for a period of 26 days, was clearly due to the negligence of appellant himself."

RIGHT TO SETTLE CONTROVERSY

THERE ARE two legal forms of settlement of debts between debtors and creditors. The first is called an "accord and satisfaction." Legally, an "accord" is an agreement whereby a debtor agrees to give and the creditor agrees to accept in satisfaction of a claim something different from what he considers himself entitled to. A "satisfaction" is the execution or signing of such an agreement.

Another form of settlement is "compromise and settlement." It is an agreement between two or more persons who, endeavoring to avoid a lawsuit, amicably settle their controversy on such terms as they can agree.

The distinction usually made between a compromise and settlement, and an accord and satisfaction, is that an "accord," which has not been executed, does not prevent a lawsuit, but a valid compromise agreement eliminates further litigation.

It is very difficult in many cases to determine whether a controversy is settled by a compromise and settlement or by an accord and satisfaction. Therefore, the courts sometimes use these phrases indiscriminately. However, a careful analysis of the different cases show that although the two terms may be used loosely, the best-reasoned decisions are based on a real difference between the two forms of settlement as above defined. The latest higher court case involving these important points of the law is Cano v. Arizona, (300 Pac. 953).

The facts of this case are that a proprietor brought suit against a man named Cano for an injunction prohibiting the latter from using its trade-mark, and asked for $5,000 damages. After one or more interviews between the counsel and the litigants a tentative arrangement for a settlement was reached and the proprietor wrote a letter to Cano which reads in part as follows:

"In consideration of this agreement we will release you from all claims of damages under the suit which is now pending in the Federal Court, but we are to proceed with the judgment and obtain a decree under the conditions set forth in the complaint, save a claim for damages. . . ."

Although the proprietor was willing to sign the compromise agreement Cano refused to enter into it and the proprietor proceeded with his suit for an injunction and $5,000 damages. The court rendered a verdict in favor of the proprietor and Cano appealed to the higher court on the contention that the original offer of the proprietor to compromise the case relieved him from paying the judgment. However, it is important to know that the higher court held Cano bound to pay the judgment rendered by the jury in the lower court, and said:

"We are of the opinion that on these facts defendant (Cano) had failed to complete the compromise agreement according to the terms offered. . . . We are of the opinion that under these circumstances plaintiff was entitled to repudiate the compromise and sue on the original cause of action."

Enforcement by Officials

OBVIOUSLY a zoning ordinance is not necessarily void simply because a certain degree of power is delegated to public officials. In fact, application and enforcement of any law must be delegated to officials and so long as such officials are not given arbitrary power, but are merely authorized to enforce the regulations, such ordinance is valid.

For example, in Taylor v. Jacksonville, (133 So. 114), it was shown that a municipality passed an ordinance and authorized the building inspector to enforce the ordinance under the rules and regulations adopted by the city commission.

It was contended by a property owner that this ordinance was void because it delegated arbitrary power to the officials. However, it is interesting to observe that the court held the ordinance valid, and said:

"The Supreme Court of the United States early held that no fundamental or whole power could be delegated, but that the power to supply the details and apply the policy as expressed by the Legislature to changing factual conditions could be. . . . Here we have a case in which zoning regulations are required to be administered by the inspector of buildings under rules and regulations prescribed by the city commission which is also authorized to review the finding of the inspector of buildings. In other words, the city commission through the inspector of buildings is authorized to administer or apply the policy as expressed by the Legislature This court has repeatedly approved such procedure."

This court decided another important point of the law and explained that an ordinance always is void if it deprives a property owner of all beneficial uses of his land. The court had this to say in that connection:

"It has been frequently held that, if the application of a zoning ordinance has the effect of completely depriving an owner of the beneficial use of his property, it would become the duty of the zoning board to relax its restrictions so as to prevent confiscation of a complainant's lands without compensation, otherwise the ordinance would be held bad."

Lighting Your Lobby to Make it Sell

lighting without bright spots when a fabric or photograph of approximately 50% transmission is used. The dimensions S should not be greater than 1.5 times D. For the usual size of panel about 4 by 6 feet, with dimension D at least 8 inches, 25- or 40-watt lamps will give sufficient brightness.

Another element of great value in advertising is motion. It has its place in the lobby for attracting as well as on the exterior of the theatre. Of course, the bright exposed lamps, so necessary on the outside, would be glaring and distracting in the lobby. However, the element of motion can be provided by dim-flashing, or even by simple flashing, of luminous frames or niches created around the posters, by indirect lighting from concealed lamps, or pattern effects produced by the wall treatment of the recess. Fig. 7 suggests arrangements for producing colorful patterns. The alternate dimming and brightening of the colors is novel and effective.

Motion, combined with a message, can be had by using a traveling word display, possibly placed under, or built into, the poster display frame. (Fig. 7). These devices generally consist of a tape which travels in front of a bank of lamps, through which light from a concentrated filament lamp is projected on to a translucent screen. The message can be changed as desired.

In all cases, light (which will increase the attention given to the displays by patrons, enliven the lobby and reflect itself ultimately in receipts at the box-office) should be intelligently applied in the lobby as well as elsewhere. So often displays are not doing their full duty because they can not be properly seen, or because they do not invite the public to look at them. The devices described here are not difficult to arrange for, and among them is a solution to almost any lobby display problem.

The Reversed Floor Slope in Practice

faces, in many cases built up on metal lath.

An extremely flexible indirect lighting system makes it possible to change completely the mood of the interior. The entire auditorium can be bathed in a soft glow of varied colors. Long lines of light come from coves in both the ceiling and the side walls. On the upper part of the auditorium side walls the indirect light is thrown downward on to a vertical surface. There are no visible lighting fixtures. An effect of indefinite depth and spatiality is achieved by these directional lines of lighting. The lighting is designed for partial use during the actual screen performance.

An interesting idea in screen masking has been employed. The velour masking which is normally laced directly in front of the screen surface, is here set back about 18 inches. The projected light on to the screen has about a 2-inch spill-off on to the receded mask. Besides being designed to eliminate fuzzy edges of the image and inaccurate framing effects, this receded masking also receives a columnar effect of colored light on each side of the screen.

The entire theatre is heated, ventilated and cooled by a central system which feeds the larger theatre above as well. The fresh air supply is distributed over the auditorium from long thin slit openings placed near the ceiling, circulation proceeding from these concealed vents to the lower part of the screen platform, where the impure air is withdrawn. Air conditioning is by Carrier.

The projection room, with an adjoining rewind room, is located immediately between the loge section of the auditorium and the lounge. Projectors are Simplex, and the sound system is Western Electric. The angle of projection is less than 1°.

NEW THEATRE PROJECTS

FOLLOWING is a list of new projects in motion picture theatre construction compiled from reports available on April 5. The list also includes remodeling projects and contracts awarded. An asterisk before an item indicates that additional information has been received since a previous report.

Theatres Planned

California

LOS ANGELES—Owner, care S. C. Lee, architect, 2404 West Seventh street, has prepared plans and specifications for fifty concrete theatres, with seating capacity of 300 seats each. Houses will be located in various cities to be announced later. Estimated cost, $50,000 each.

Florida

HIALEAH—James Hodges, of Miami, Fla., plans the erection of a proposed new reinforced concrete theatre, with seating capacity of 650.

MIAMI BEACH—Paist & Stewart, architects, 821 Ingraham Building, have received bids for the $25,000 Collins Theatre to be located on Collins avenue at Espanols Way. It will be a one and two-story reinforced concrete theatre, equipped with acoustical ceiling, upholstered seats, sound apparatus, etc.

Illinois

CHICAGO—Owner, care Teich & Sullivan, architects, 64 West Randolph street, have prepared plans for a proposed new theatre to be located at North and Milwaukee avenues. Estimated cost, $200,000.

Indiana

EVANSVILLE—Dixie Realty Company, A. O. Hasensell, president, Claremore Hotel Building, 127 Locust street, has plans by A. S. Craven, Inc., 100 North La Salle street, Chicago, Ill., for a proposed new theatre to be located at Second and Sycamore streets. Estimated cost, $200,000.

Massachusetts

GARDNER—H. Johnson, care R. B. Erskins, 280 Water street, plans the rebuilding of a two-story theatre and store building destroyed by fire some months ago. Architect not selected. Estimated cost, $150,000.

New York

NEW YORK—The F. H. D. Holding Corporation, 309 West Twenty-third street, has plans by Thomas B. Lamb, 507 Seventh avenue, for a proposed new theatre and store building to be located at 261 Eighth avenue. Cost, $1,000,000.

North Carolina

CHARLOTTE—Benton & Benton, of Wilson, N. C., have called for bids for the erection of a two-story brick theatre. Estimated cost, $50,000.

WINSTON-SALEM—Pilot Real Estate Company plans the erection of a new theatre for colored patrons in the neighborhood of Fourth and Chestnut streets.

South Carolina

ANDERSON—G. H. Bailes is reported planning the erection of a two-story brick theatre to be operated by P. C. Osteen, manager of the Egyptian Theatre.

Vermont

BELLOWS FALLS—J. W. Suter, trustee of Suter Estate, plans the rebuilding of a three-story theatre, store and office building destroyed by fire some months ago. Architect not selected. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Virginia

NORFOLK—W. S. Wilder, care Newport Theatre, has plans by Bernard Spilgel, New Monroe Building, for a proposed new theatre to be located at Calley and Shirley avenues.

Remodeling

Arkansas

PINE BLUFF—Malco Amusement Company is reported planning to install a $10,000 cooling system in the Saenger Theatre, Arthur R. Swanke, manager.

Florida

MIAMI—John C. Knight, Venetian Arcade Building, has awarded the contract to G. Henry Hunt, Inc., 1636 S. W. Ninth street, for repairs, additions and other improvements to the Paramount Theatre on S. E. First avenue. Lee L. Wade, architect, 1006 Exchange Building.

Georgia

ATLANTA—Loew Theatre interests reported planning to expend $250,000 in remodeling Loew's Grand Theatre.

New Jersey

NEWARK—F. Grad, architect, 1023 Broad street, has awarded the contract to the Pellecchia Construction Company, 50 Bramford place, for alterations and construction of a brick theatre addition for the Fleissner Realty Company, C. Fleissner, president, 129 Pulaski street. Improvements estimated to cost $150,000.

North Carolina

DURHAM—Erwin West Construction Company, Statesville, N. C., has contract to convert a building on Church street into a modern picture theatre for the Criterion Amusement Company. Benton & Benton, architects. Improvements to cost approximately $30,000.

Texas

SAN ANTONIO—Suburban Theatres, Inc., care John T. Wilson, Jr., 719 Fredericksburg road, has awarded the contract to A. Y. Hayes, 125 Grant street, for alterations and construction of additions to the Harlandale Theatre at 5626 Flores street, and the Highland Theatre at 1833 South Hackberry street.

Contracts Awarded

California

BERKELEY—The United Artists Theatres of California, Inc., 333 South Broadway, Los Angeles, Calif., has awarded the contract to Cahill Brothers, 206 Sansome street, San Francisco, Calif., for the erection of a new reinforced concrete theatre. Estimated cost, $188,785.

LONG BEACH.—The United Artists Theatres of California, Inc., 333 South Broadway, Los Angeles, Calif., has awarded the contract to J. W. Forderer, 742 Hill street, Los Angeles, Calif., for the completion of a 100 by 145 feet reinforced concrete theatre. Former contracts rescinded. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Georgia

ATLANTA—J. A. Rebb, 516 Boulevard, S. E., has awarded the contract to J. F. Higdon, 1135 University avenue, S. E., for the erection of a brick, stone and concrete theatre at 635 Fair street.

Indiana

ANGOLA—Westerly Corporation, 229 North La Salle street, Chicago, Ill., has awarded the contract to C. W. Holland for the erection of a new two-story brick and stone-trim theatre, 60 by 200 feet. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Maine

BAR HARBOR—G. McKay, 245 Main street, has awarded the contract to P. P. Carey Company, 28 Common street, Waterville, Me., for the erection of a one-story concrete theatre, 75 by 155 feet. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Maryland

CUMBERLAND—Contract has been awarded to F. Hazelwood, Howard street, for the erection of a three-story reinforced concrete theatre for the Capitol Theatre Company. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Massachusetts

GLOUCESTER—J. D. Bloomberg, 83 Main street, has awarded the contract to the G. P. H. Macomber Company, 38 Chauncy street, Boston, Mass., for the erection of a one-story brick, stone and reinforced concrete theatre to be located at 238 Main street. Cost, $150,000.

Oklahoma

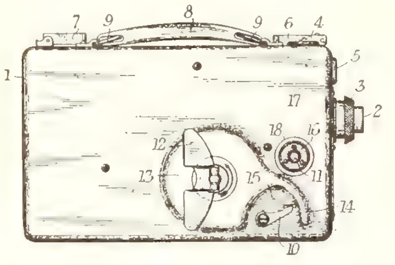
OKLAHOMA CITY—P. B. Bingham, 704 East Third street, has been awarded the contract to erect a one-story brick theatre, 30 by 115 feet. Cost, $10,000.

New Inventions . . . illustrated descriptions of devices related to motion pictures and allied crafts, recently published by the U. S. government and selected for Better Theatres by William N. Moore, patent specialist of Washington, D. C.

1,809,256. MOTOR OPERATED MOTION PICTURE CAMERA. Paul A. Stephenson, Rochester, N. Y., assignor to Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed Jan. 8, 1929. Serial No. 331,111. 10 Claims. (Cl. 88—18.4).



1. In motion picture apparatus, the combination with a pulldown mechanism of a power drive for the mechanism, a trigger for releasing the power drive, mechanism associated with the power drive adapted to be moved to an operative position for altering the normal speed of the pulldown mechanism, a push button control member for actuating said mechanism, and a casing for enclosing said parts, an embossing on the casing adjacent the trigger and forming a guard therefor.

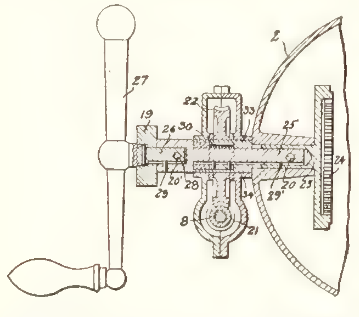
1,809,327. MOTION PICTURE PROJECTOR. Gerald J. Badgley, Brooklyn, N. Y., assignor to Duplex Motion Picture Industries, Inc., a Corporation of Delaware. Filed July 23, 1924. Serial No. 727,678. 5 Claims. (Cl. 74—7).



1. In a picture projecting apparatus, the combination with driving gear therefor, and motor-operated driving means for said driving gear, of means for permitting manual operation of said driving year to adjust the position of the film and to bring any desired portion thereof into position for projection, said manual operating means embodying a removable crank having a shaft provided with a runway adapted for coaction with a stop carried by a bushing surrounding said shaft to lock said shaft and bushing together to permit rotary movement in unison.

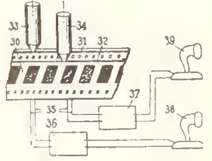
1,799.378. METHOD OF AND SYSTEM FOR REPRODUCING SOUNDS. Heinrich Kuchenmeister, Berlin, Germany. Filed Sept. 15, 1926. Serial No. 135,650, and in Germany Sept. 22, 1925. 3 Claims. (Cl. 179—100.3.)



1. The method of improving the tone quality in talking films, which consists in producing in the film through optical means a plurality of phase-displaced sound record impressions, with a time interval of from ⅛ to 1/30 of a second and converting said impressions into sound.

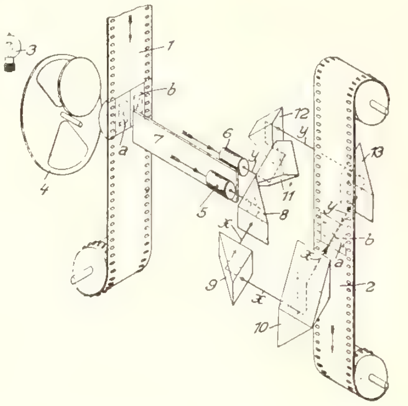
1,802,530. METHOD AND A DEVICE FOR PRODUCING COLOR FILMS. Otto Pilny and Alex Pilny, Zurich, Switzerland. Filed Nov. 3, 1927. Serial No. 230,818, and in Switzerland Sept. 1, 1927. 8 Claims. (Cl. 88—24).



2. Method of producing colored films for projecting purposes, which comprises sending light from a single source through a closely adjacent pair of correlated pictures on a first film in parallel rays maintained separate, and separately focusing these rays simultaneously to separate optical reflecting systems onto opposite sentized surfaces of a second film in registering positions of the same height as the pictures on the first film and then stepping both films the same distance.

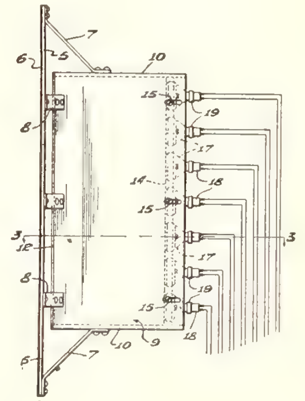
1,802,480. SOUND-AMPLIFYING APPARATUS. Harrison W. Rogers, New York, N. Y. Filed Jan. 9, 1928. Serial No. 245,618. 4 Claims. (Cl. 88—16.2).



3. The combination with a motion picture screen through which sound waves are permeable of a sound directing medium attached to and supported from the rear face thereof, and a plurality of loud speaker units associated with said medium and disposed one above the other in a series and adapted to be operated simultaneously to produce a wide smooth fan of sound waves to and through the screen.

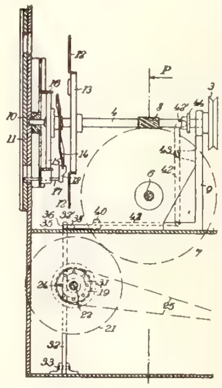
1,803,271. FILM-STOPPING DEVICE. Kurt Morsbach, Berlin-Lichterfelde, Germany, assignor, by mesne assignments, to Projector G. m. b. H., Berlin, Germany, a Corporation of Germany. Filed Mar. 9, 1929. Serial No. 345,848, and in Germany Jan. 4, 1927. 6 Claims. (Cl. 88—18.4).



1. In a film stopping device for stopping the intermittent movement of the film through a film projecting apparatus a push rod, an angle-lever one end of which engages a lateral projection of the push rod, a pivotally mounted lever one end of which is connected with the other end of the angle-lever by means of a tension rod, the other end of the pivotally mounted lever being pressed against a flange of the continuously rotating main shaft and axially shifting the same when the push rod is operated, gripping pins which are operated by the main shaft by means of a cam disc arranged thereon and which are retracted together with the driving shaft as to prevent them from engaging the film, and a spiral screw on the main shaft engaging a continuously rotating worm wheel which drives the feeding and the winding and unwinding mechanism by means of a coupling disconnected when the main shaft is axially shifted, the axial thrust of the spiral screw returning automatically the main shaft to its operative position when the push rod ceases to operate.

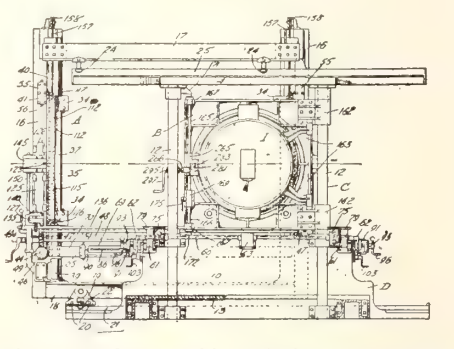
1,809,274. PHOTOGRAPHIC PRINTING APPARATUS. William C. Huebner, Buffalo, N. Y., assignor to Huebner-Bleistein Patents Company, Buffalo, N. Y. Filed Nov. 23, 1927. Serial No. 235,379. 34 Claims. (Cl. 95—76).



1. In a photographic printing apparatus, the combination with a holder adapted to carry a sensitized plate; of a support adapted to carry a printing plate, said support being movable to an operative position with respect to said holder; a member on which the printing plate is adapted to be detachably secured and held on said support, said member being movable relative to said support toward and from said holder to thereby place the printing plate into and out of contact with the sensitized plate; means for permitting such movement including resilent means for yieldingly moving said member towards said support for placing the printing and sensitized plates out of contact, and the adjustable means for forcing said member towards said holder against the action of said resilent means for placing the plates into contact.

Modern Seating and Chair Maintenance

under "Chairs Already Installed," is invalidated. Because of those factors mentioned above, it may become necessary to purchase repair parts or upholstering materials.

Wherever feasible, have the chairs installed by the installation men of the factory making the chair. Proper installation is very important to successful operation of the chairs and minimum maintenance.

Investigate carefully the adequacy of each part of the chair to fulfill the functions required of it. Below details are given to be watched for in this connection:

Loose Floor Fastenings.—These are detected by shaking standard. Watch end standards particularly. If taken care of in time, the standard can usually be made fast by tightening the nut above the foot. If the anchor has come loose, remove it and insert a new anchor. Purchase new anchors through chair manufacturer if possible. If hole in floor has become larger, use a larger-sized anchor or drill a deeper hole. The size of drill required can be obtained from manufacturer. If the hole has broken away at the surface of the concrete, drill a deeper hole. If the concrete has crumpled away or is bad, use a quick setting cement. These cements are liquids at high temperature and expand on cooling. Full instructions for their use can be obtained from the manufacturer.

Make sure chair manufacturer has given sufficient study to anchoring to insure his having adopted the best possible anchor. Best results will be insured if standards are anchored by installation men from the factory or distributor. If the factory has not adopted a specific anchor for its chairs, and allows installation men to use whatever anchors they choose, it is evidence that sufficient study and thought have not been given to this important matter.

Loose Seats.—These are detected by raising and lowering seat. Tighten screws or bolts, or insert next larger size screw, or remove the seat, fill up screw holes with hardwood plugs and reattach the seat with regular screws after drilling a lead hole 9/64 of an inch in diameter. If bottom is held in place by screws, there should be at least six screws, three to each bracket.

Hinges must be of such design that they will operate correctly under any and all conditions which are met in installation. Hinges must have adequate cushion to prevent jar at up-stop and down-stop. Hinge should be so designed that there will be no movement between the seat and the hinge which would tend to work the screws.

Noisy Backs.—These are detected by shaking the back. Correct the same as seats if backs are screwed or bolted. If clip backs are used [See Figure 4, Page 18, March 12th issue] tighten bolt.

The back fastening between standard and back must have sufficient flexibility to prevent undue strain on back bolts or screws, and any tendency to work them loose. Hinge must have sufficient cushion to prevent jarring the back fastening.

Noisy Hinges.—These are detected by raising and lowering seat. They may be caused by the looseness of bolt. Tighten the bolt. Sometimes recurrence can be prevented by riveting bolt. They also may be caused by squeaking. Lubricate with heavy grease. Insert with grease gun if possible. And they may be caused by worn or inadequate cushion. Secure special instructions from the manufacturer, or replace, in this case.

Hinge must be properly designed so that it will work freely under all installation conditions, so that any tendency to produce loosening is adequately guarded against. Hinges should be permanently lubricated at the factory. Cushion should be provided in such a way that it will always function adequately.

Tight Hinges.—They are detected by moving seat up and down. Lubricate. Loosen bolt. Work hinge up and down by hand a number of times.

Seat Bottom Rough; Burred Screws.—This condition is detected by complaints from patrons of frayed or torn stockings or clothes. Make edge of bottom smooth. Smooth bottom by sand papering and refinishing. File off burrs on screws.

Seat bottoms should be of metal and adequately protected from rusting. No screws should be used under front edge of seat.

Uncomfortable Seats.—These are detected by lumpy appearance or by sitting on them. Sometimes these seats can be moved into less used parts of the house. Sometimes the cover can be removed and a layer of stuffing material or cotton added.

Spring construction should be such that it will not break down in use, and does not have excessive shimmy. Proper provision in an upholstered seat should be made to keep the stuffing material from working down in the holes between the springs. Stuffing material should have permanent resilience. The top front edge of the seat should be adequately protected so that the stuffing material will not be pushed off or backward, leaving a hard front edge.

Worn Upholstering Material.—This is detected by appearance. If the house is inspected at regular intervals it will be possible to greatly lengthen the satisfactory life of the upholstering material. The seats and backs on those chairs which receive the hardest use can be exchanged from time to time with those which receive the least amount of use.

Select only upholstering material whose wear life has been adequately established by tests or actual service use. All parts should be so designed that they will offer the greatest possible protection to the upholstering material. There should be no sharp corners and no places subjected to wear which do not have padding underneath the upholstering material.

dicate that the worst of the present situation is over and that conditions are on the mend.

"I have said that New England is leading the nation back to prosperity, and I mean it. New England is six months ahead of the rest of the country in business improvement because of the fact that in New England we manufacture perishable products, the quick-wearing goods. When a depression hits the country, curtailment comes first in goods that wear out quickly, the shoes and textile products. As depression continues they hit the long-wearing goods, such as the heavy steel industry. For some months past New England has been showing a rapid improvement in the manufacturing of the quick-wearing lines and within the past few weeks the steel industry has shown a marked improvement.

"One of the present phases of the past depression is that those who have been for a long time out of employment have spent their savings and it is for them, that nationally, relief funds have been raised to help them throughout the winter. It is a matter of provable fact that employment is better than a year ago and that every week the unemployment figures are dropping from the previous week's totals.

"However, it takes time for adjustment. What we must one and all do, at this moment, is to rid ourselves of the 'fear' of the future. To spend normally and to buy within our incomes, to keep money in circulation. If we will do that, purchase our needs, we create employment for others. They in turn will be able to spend and they in turn create further emloyment. I have pointed out many times that such a round-robin increases through the force of its own momentum."

Vol. 107, No. 3 April 16, 1932

AND TOMORROW?

THE economists, and near-economists, are having a merry time disagreeing about the causes of the current business condition, but mostly they all agree, even such divergent industrialists as Mr. Henry Ford and Mr. Myron C. Taylor, chairman of the finance board of the United States Steel Corporation, that the working week, in the progress of time, will be shorter and that with increased leisure there will be increased consumption.

That is hardly to be doubted or disputed. In the twenty-seven years of the motion picture theatre we have seen the process at work. In 1905 eight o'clock was a common hour for the opening of offices. Quitting time was six, or thereabouts. The working week had six days in it. A dollar was a considerable piece of money and a man who earned ten thousand a year was expected to wear a high silk hat on Sunday.

A very different life has evolved in the intervening quarter of a century. For most workers the week has many free hours and there is, or has been, a new scale of spending, spending in hectic haste to burn up the leisure. Commercialized sports and entertainments have increased many fold. The motion picture has vastly more competition now than in the year of the birth of the nickelodeon. In point of consumer hours per capita, on which there can be no reliable figures, it is a certainty that the motion picture has lost ground since 1914. There are more things to do, places to go.

The next decade is sure to see the consumer public with more playtime. If the motion picture is to proportionately hold its share, or if it is to hope to increase its appeal to the idle spender's dollar, it is not too soon for someone to be thinking about it. Most of the ardent thinking in the world of the motion picture for a whole generation has been about what might happen in the next thirty days. We now know it is a business of years, with its larger cycles of change apparently having a periodicity of some eight or nine years. Who in the world of the motion picture has a notion for 1940—or even 1933?

THE LAGGARD LAW

THE decision in the Federal courts of Chicago anent the once exciting Balaban & Katz case, pertaining to some trade practises thereabouts, comes just as most all Federal decisions in the whole of the history of motion picture litigation have, "after the parade has passed." Thus, far down the years the motion picture industry has evolved faster than litigations affecting its practises could be brought to bear. So far one cannot recall any instance in which a judicial decision has importantly affected the destiny of any corporation or the methods and practises of any ramification of the established institution of the screen. Broadly it may be observed that the motion picture would be just about where it is if no one had ever gone to court about anything. The motion picture's issues are always settled in the field.

SILKEN ACOUSTICS

IT becomes our obligation to record that the solemn and dignified Paul R. Heyl of the Bureau of Standards has been concerning himself recently a great deal with women's clothing—all, of course, in the interest of science and the sound picture. He finds that acoustics for this day of sheer fabrics and less of them are very different from those of the auditoria of the bebustled and heavily petticoated Victorian '90's. A little talk and sound goes a deal farther now, he finds. Yes, Dr. Heyl, and that is only the half of it.

SAVING CANADA

IT is unlikely that any considerable proportion of the sane and industrious motion picture exhibitors of Canada will be found to share the alarm felt by Attorney General W. H. Price of Toronto, who says he feels that the American pictures "threaten the very foundation of all ideals held dear by the Canadian people." American pictures have been the chief amusement fare of the Dominion for more than two decades and the foundations are still there. Canada, like the United States, has a deal of its political life made gay and exciting by professional viewers with alarm—or, better, alarum.

HEALTHY ARGUMENT

INTERESTINGLY all of New York's critical judgment on M-G-M's "Grand Hotel" agrees on the important success of the picture as entertainment, and most amusingly proceeds at once to disagree with vast divergence on the factors of merit and the relative achievements of the several stellar figures of the imposing cast. Meanwhile the exhibitor and his patrons will be able to content themselves with the product while the critics work on the box score.

The Yes-Man is not extinct. The long silence about him merely indicates that things are in such a way that no one has had anything to ask him recently.

The dignified Rita C. McGoldrick, who reports on special audience values of pictures in MOTION PICTURE HERALD and on the radio, positively rippled this week with the discovery that all of the uplifting picture selection committees from the D.A.R. to the Daughters of I Will Arise have for the first time in the world's history agreed unanimously on the meritoriousness of a picture—and, my dear, the title is "The Wet Parade."

'THE MOST CONTROLLED INDUSTRY'

—BALTIMORE MORNING SUN

DEPRESSING

It must be "depressing" to the censors that motion pictures, the "most supervised and controlled form of industry and entertainment in America," still present the question of propriety and influence, says the MORNING SUN of BALTIMORE, to reports in Maryland that recommendation has been made for laws to regulate children's attendance thus:

> . . . The difficulties and contradictions implicit in censorship, even when exercised liberally and rather wisely, are apparent in the report. It notices that "in many of the films sex is over-emphasized," . . . yet it adds that "frank discussion of sex is the order of the day." It approves of the assembly resolution condemning pictures "having a plot, tone of character which is degrading, indecent or salacious" (the old, much fought over, highly general terms), yet it admits that "there is an evidence of a quite deplorable appreciation of this type of picture among regular theatre patrons" and also that "constantly changing standards of moral conduct are making difficult, if not well-nigh impossible, the control of films."
> . . . Is the public's "appreciation" the cause or effect of "unsatisfactory pictures"? Are the changing standards consequent to, or do they explain, the "frank discussion"? Are censors to accept or resist the "new" standards? Are the pictures, in short, reflections of an actual public taste or are they relatively isolated phenomena acting upon and forming that taste, etc.? . . .
> The most marked irony of the situation is, of course, that the movies are the most supervised and controlled form of industry and entertainment in America. And yet, after all the laws, reforms, arguments, boards, Hays' czardom and moral pronouncements, the question of the propriety and influence of the movies is still before us. It must be nearly as depressing to the censors as to everybody else.

OF COURSE

And the EVENING SUN of BALTIMORE wonders whether the censors know better than fathers and mothers "what their Susies and Willies should be permitted to witness," saying:

> . . . And now, it would seem, mama and papa must let somebody else decide what movies the family may repair to for diversion on Friday and Saturday nights. The assumption is, of course, that parents have neither the good sense nor the moral responsibility to make their own discriminations. The Board of Motion Picture Censors knows better than mothers and fathers what their Susies and Willies should be permitted to witness. . . .

CANDY, TOO

Discretion on the parents' part might have something to do with the matter of the child and the motion picture, suggests a writer, Marion Clyde McCarroll, in the EVENING POST of NEW YORK, discussing a survey by Dr. Frank K. Shuttleworth of Yale, who found that "the exploits of filmdom's most intriguing bad men do not by any means fire the youngsters with a burning desire to emulate these deeds of daring." Says Miss McCarroll:

> Picking on the movies as a menace to children altogether seems just about as sensible as wholesale condemnation of books or candy or games. Anyone will contend that there are not movies which are entirely suitable for small boys and girls. There are cheap and unhealthy pictures just as there is cheap and unhealthy candy or undesirable reading matter. . . . In all of these things, it is for the parents to exercise judgment and discretion. And if a child is harmed by movie-going, he is far more likely to be the victim of his parents stupidity than of the producers' mistakes.

AIM! FIRE!

Objection to having "evil ideas shot at me" in pictures is voiced by "W.W." in an editorial in the SUN at ATTLEBORO in MASSACHUSETTS, stating his case as follows:

> . . . I have no kick against the movie that is decent, whether I find it interesting or not. The word "interesting" is a very indefinite term; it classifies nothing. I may think a thing interesting and you may not. Perhaps we are both intelligent persons. The matter of taste makes a thing interesting to you or to me. There are certain masterpieces of literature, drama, and music, the worth of which I readily admit, because they are pronounced classics by persons whose judgment is twenty-two carat; yet, to me, those productions are entirely uninteresting; they simply do not click with my taste.
> But what rouses my ire, is to be faced with a movie that throws out salacious and vicious suggestions. I do not know how you are constituted; but I have enough trouble keeping evil ideas out of my head without spending my time and money going some places to have such ideas shot at me.

MENACING!

Now that North Manchuria is installing sound, the writer of an editorial article in the TIMES-PICAYUNE at NEW ORLEANS wonders whether that war-ridden country is facing something worse than bayonets in the way opened to the crooner. He puts it this way:

> Read this and guess where it all took place! "The outstanding feature during 1931 was the introduction on a large scale of sound and talking pictures, which, contrary to expectations, met with instant and complete success. One theatre, operated by an American picture corporation, took the first step and the example soon was followed by others. At present five theatres, having a total of 4,798 seats, are equipped with excellent American machines and their halls adapted for sound pictures. Two other theatres with 2,700 seats, recently opened, are at present showing silents, but negotiations are now in progress to install American sound machinery." That which we have quoted is a communication from our American vice-consul, T. L. Lilliestrom and is in reference to—would you ever have guessed it?—North Manchuria! Just when we all had worked up a keen sympathy for the entire population in that region we are thus brought back to earth and to a recognition that maybe after all the real sorrow menacing the Manchurians is the possible introduction there of a crooning craze.

COMPARISON OF 'X' AND 'Y' PROVES SIMPLE DRAMATIC PICTURE PAYS

Two of Season's Outstanding Pictures of Sophisticated and Simple Romantic Themes Are Studied for B. O. Reactions

Reports and Comments Show Exhibitors in Lesser Communities Prefer Unsophisticated Film to Drawing-Room Type

The article presented herewith endeavors to isolate in the test tube of research the clear cut reactions of the exhibitor and his audience toward two sharply divergent types of product, exemplified by two of the season's most competent pictures. No inference of adverse criticism of either is to be implied. The purpose is to present, sharp cut and clearly, reaction to the type of product, rather than the individual picture. For that reason the actual titles are not used in the article. Instead 'X' represents the sophisticated picture, 'Y' the unsophisticated as labels for categories of production, not as pictures. The question is not concerning skill, taste, ability or any quality whatsoever except marketability and audience acceptance.

THE EDITOR.

By CHARLES S. AARONSON

The sophisticated type of motion picture, however smart it may be, however much of clever, even brilliant dialogue it may contain, is not a financially successful venture from the standpoint of the exhibitor in the smaller centers of population over the country, though it has been successful in the largest metropolitan centers. This statement is the virtually unanimous opinion of showmen in representative smaller communities, a study by MOTION PICTURE HERALD shows.

This drawing-room type of screen drama or comedy drama, though successful in a real measure in the larger metropolitan centers, as reflected in the box office receipts compiled from numerous first-run situations of the key cities of the country, cannot draw audiences to the box office window at the theatres of the larger body of subsequent-run theatres. These exhibitors, whose potential audience does not have the same variety of taste found in the large city, cannot realize a reasonable profit, if any at all, from the presentation of the sophisticated film, it is clearly indicated by the emphatic reports and comments received.

Simple Picture Draws Best

On the other hand, the truly unsophisticated, homely type of simple, and perhaps romantic film story, is not only greatly desired by the smaller community exhibitors, but is the sort of film from which they derive their greatest profit, which will draw their particular audience to the box office, and which sends that audience from the theatre with a definite feeling of satisfaction, the study points out.

Two recent productions, which will be designated hereafter as "X" and "Y," were selected for the study. In the first place, they are clearly representative of the sophisticated and unsophisticated film, respectively; secondly, each has been generally considered an excellent production from the standpoint of merit, and, thirdly, each in its particular class features players of outstanding merit. In all cases "X" will identify the sophisticated picture taken as representative of its type, and "Y" will indicate the unsophisticated example selected.

WHAT THE SMALL EXHIBITOR SAYS

"Here is our little town (3500 population) the sophisticated type of film starves to death. . . ."

". . . the sophisticated type of picture does not mean a dime at the box office. . . ."

". . . our patrons are very tired of sophisticated pictures."

"The risque sophisticated type is a scourge in my community (be it ever so clever). . . . There is no argument against the simple, romantic production. . . ."

"I am sure that the average picture goer does not want any sophisticated type shows."

"The sophisticated type of picture has never been a commercial success in this town. . . ."

"The Inarticulate Majority"

B. P. Schulberg, in charge of production at the Paramount Coast Studios, made certain remarks peculiarly pertinent to this inquiry at a Wampas dinner in Hollywood last fall. Speaking informally, Mr. Schulberg answered a series of questions which queried, in effect: What type of picture should the industry make? Why does the industry not make more pictures of the smart, sophisticated drawing-room drama type?

Mr. Schulberg said: "The industry has made a mistake, and that is that it has listened all too often to the articulate minority and all too often has overlooked the inarticulate majority. The result has been many pictures brilliantly done and praised by the articulate few but without mass appeal. Such pictures as our own 'Royal Family of Broadway' and 'Laughter' are examples of this type of picture. The industry now knows that it must furnish entertainment with mass appeal and that it cannot be deceived by the voices of the articulate few.

"The public wants simple, homely, heart-interest pictures that it can believe and understand. The tremendous success of pictures of this type proves my point. I could cite many examples. The public wants movement and action in its motion pictures. . . . The industry must think only of mass appeal; otherwise it cannot survive."

These socalled "small" exhibitors, in most cases owning the theatres in which they have operated for years, reach audiences recognized as typical of the great mass of population, to which Mr. Schulberg doubtless referred when he said: "The industry must think only of mass appeal, otherwise it cannot survive."

As an indication of the representative scope of these opinions, geographically, replies have been received from exhibitors operating, in every case in a small town, in Indiana, Louisiana, Iowa, Texas, Illinois, Idaho, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Kansas, Mississippi, Kentucky, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Montana.

Pointed Comments

A few of the most pointed comments, without immediate reference to individual or location, follow:

"Here in our little town (3500 population) the sophisticated type of film starves to death. . . ."

"'Y' did above average business for us. . . . A good high-class comedy goes over their (the audience) heads and they rate it a total loss. . . ."

" . . . the sophisticated type of picture does not mean a dime at the box office. . . ."

" . . . our patrons are very tired of sophisticated pictures."

"I am sure that the average picture goer does not want any sophisticated type shows. . . . My patrons resented the show,'X'. . ."

"'Y' brought us more than three times as much as 'X'. If we should run in succession three such pictures as 'X' we would be out of business. . . ."

"'Y' did about twice the business done by 'X' . . . the simple romance type always 'clicks'. . ."

"Such pictures as 'X' (in my mind) should be shown only in theatres that cater to the classes, not the masses. It is a 'flop' in this kind of a town. . . . 'Y' is a picture that the whole family comes to see. . . ."

"The risque sophisticated type is a scourge in my community (be it ever so clever) . . . There is no argument against the simple, romantic production. . . ."

Records of "X"

Compilation of the box office receipts of first run theatres in key metropolitan cities, as published regularly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, indicated that "X" in its pre-release run at a theatre in New York grossed a total of $143,390 in nine weeks under a two-a-day policy. The best week of the nine showed a gross of $19,981. The record high total of the house is $24,216.

Following is a record of the results at the box offices of the theatres where "X" was shown in major cities of the country. Appended to the record for each theatre are noted the "high" and "low" record week totals for the particular theatre in each case.

Outside of the New York run of the picture the record indicates that "X" played to a total gross of $371,174 in 23 weeks, a total of $514,564 including the Broadway run. In 22 different first run theatres, not including New York (the picture played two weeks at the United Artists in Detroit) computation indicates an average gross per showing of $16,094. Again, it is noteworthy that in practically all cases "X" drew a figure far under the record "high" for the house involved. In one instance, at the Arcadia in Philadelphia, the film established a record "high" of $6,500.

For comparative purposes there follows a similar box office record on "Y" in major cities, also with the record "highs" and "lows" for the theatres noted.

In the case of "Y," numerous holdover showings are recorded, and a few instances of return engagements. In many cases, too, "Y" came very much closer to equaling the record "high" for the house than did "X." At the Imperial theatre in Toronto, during the week of September 26, 1931, "Y" did establish a new house "high" record of $22,000. It is also recorded, on the other side, that the film established one new "low" record; at the Chinese theatre in Hollywood, during the week of October 3, with a gross of $9,000.

"Y" reached an aggregate gross for 46 showings of $730,101, which equals an average gross per showing of $15,872. Though "X," then seems to have drawn a greater total average figure in its key situation showings than did "Y," the latter film came very much closer to the top grosses of the theatres where it played, on the one hand, and on the other played many holdover and return engagements, while "X" was held over in only one theatre.

What the Exhibitors Said

Certain of the exhibitors responding to the inquiry were outspoken in their utterances, and unmistakable in their implication.

R. D. Carter, owning and operating the Fairfax theatre, in Kilmarnock, Va., holds the sophisticated type of film partly responsible for the depressed condition of film business. He says:

"First of all, let us say that our patrons are above the average of motion picture going audiences in refinement and intelligence; good, clean, honest American people.

"We have just played 'X' and the result at the box office makes your question a very easy one to answer, for 'Y' brought us more than three times as much as 'X.' Not one in a hundred liked 'X,' while every one liked and praised 'Y.' Some said this picture was not quite as good as 'Daddy Long Legs.'

"If we should run in succession three such pictures as 'X,' we should be out of business. The 'sophisticated,' 'gang' and dirty underworld type of pictures are more responsible for the very low business than anything else. . . . The motion picture going public as a whole don't give a hoot for 'art,' 'sophistication' and all that the 'critics' rave about; what the picture-public want is entertainment, and they have been getting very little of real good entertainment of late. And if the producers don't wake up and make a change in their product very soon, we all will be much worse off than we are now. . . . Let us have more hokum, more sweetness, more comedy, simple themes of clean, honest every-day American life. . . ."

Favors Romantic Type

From Bedford, Pa., writes H. R. Cromwell of the Bedford Theatre:

"The sophisticated type of picture has never been a commercial success in this town. . . . .

"My experience has been from comparative figures that the sophisticated type does a business below average and the picture of a simple romantic type, similar to 'Y,' which we played, does a business about four times the average. . . ."

Larry A. Woodin, operating the Arcadia theatre of Wellsboro, also in Pennsylvania, believes investigation of the public's reaction to types of films is an important step on the road to better pictures. He writes:

EXHIBITOR COMMENT ON FILM TYPES

"Let me first say that an investigation of the public's reaction to the type of movies offered is a short cut to better box office. It will eliminate the costly trail and error method that has always been used and will place this industry just one step nearer the peak of sane business. Any other business investigates to an unlimited degree before beginning production on any scale. Ever since the days of the first flicker drama it has been the practice to produce in this industry and then attempt to make the public buy. Common sense shows the logical way to bigger box office: Find out what the public wants and then make it. Your box office and audience reaction survey of the 'sophisticated' and simple romance types of production should be just a start. Properly handled, it should produce figures and facts that will hand many a producer a few surprises and result in an extensive box office and audience reaction survey concerning all types of pictures.

Simple Romance Preferred

"Regarding the comparison of box office figures of 'Y' and 'X' at this theatre, 'Y' did about twice the business done by 'X.' Audience reactions on this film 'X' are too varied to warrant a decent house should it again show here. The simple romance type always clicks because the average movie goer likes this type of picture. We have few sophisticated people in this country. Most of us are after all just plain simple folks. Here lies the answer to the survey in this case. I feel sure that were you to go back over the category of movies from the start that you would find this same story written all over the box office statements of this country."

A Masterpiece, But . . .

Jack Greene, part owner of the Geneseo theatre in the town of Geneseo, in Middlewestern Illinois, agrees that "X" is "a work of art," but points out that it was not generally liked by his patrons. He also offers a suggestion. Thus:

"While 'X' is a work of art in every sense of the word, yet it was not liked, only by a few that could see the value of good acting, direction and all around production work. In my mind it was a masterpiece.

"On the other hand, 'Y' was just as good a production, direction and acting fine.

"'X' was run on a Sunday, one of our best if not the best day in the week, but did not draw well, and the remarks of the patrons coming out after the show were not meant for compliments.

"'Y' was run during the week on a night that did not mean much and it drew very well, and every remark that was heard regarding it was very complimentary.

"Such pictures as 'X' (in my mind) should be shown only in theatres that cater to the classes, and not the masses. It is a flop in this kind of a town.

"'Y' is a family picture, a picture that the whole family comes to see, and also recommended by women's clubs, which means something. If you were to ask me if I would like to play pictures like 'X' I would say NO!

"Like 'Y'—YES!"

Child Attendance Factor

Frank E. Sabin, operator and prorietor of the Majestic theatre in Eureka, Montana, becomes rather heated on the subject of risque sophisticated pictures, and presents the child attendance angle as well. Signing himself "not from Bluenose Sabin but from plain Frank Sabin," he says:

"The risque sophisticated type is a scourge in any community (be it ever so clever). Some producers seem to delight injecting risque bits here and there throughout their pictures. I can't get their angle. . . .

"The above situations (bedroom type scenes) aren't particularly harmful to adults or kids under 10 years of age, but they seriously affect the thoughts of those between the ages of 10 and 20. I have carefully observed the reactions of the 10 to 20 year group and every off-color situation draws a chorus of 'ohs' and 'ahs', also more pertinent expressions. . . .

"Parents view these scenes and, rightfully, grow indignant. They exert every effort to keep their children clean in mind. I draw them into my little show and, in one short hour, wreck all their efforts. . . . the record of the movie folk is replete with these same situations.

—And the Censor Boards

"The censor boards are a thorn in the side of many of your contributors, (if I read the HERALD aright). As long as movie makers turn out dirty sophisticated pictures we will have these boards. Eliminate the smut and the censors are eliminated.

"There is no argument against the 'simple romantic productions,' nor is there any against the comedy drama, musical comedy, dramatic story, entertaining western or any other clean picture. These types win hands down (with me).

"Parents phone me daily—'Is your picture this week O. K. for my kids?' I've heard it countless times. There should be no necessity for this question. Anyway, I try to be honest with them and it occasionally costs me real 'dough.' But it pays in the long run. . . ."

Sophisticated "Not Wanted"

In fewer words A. Mitchell of the Dixie theatre in Russellville, Kentucky, expresses his pointed thought:

"My patrons resented the show 'X'; in fact, most all of them walked out on it. . . . Evidently they don't want the 'sophisticated' shows.

"I did not run 'Y,' but a town close by did and my patrons drove to see it and told me it was a good show.

"I am sure that the average picture goer does not want any sophisticated type shows."

With no waste of words D. E. Fritton of the Lyric theatre in Harrison, Ark., says:

"'Y' type goes over much better with us. Small town, population, 3,500.

"One a year is sufficient like 'X.'"

P. G. Held of Griswold, Iowa, where he operates the New Strand theatre, says briefly but pointedly:

". . . From past experience in the 18 years I have been in this business I have always found that pictures on the type of 'Y' are much better box office attractions than pictures of the type of 'X' . . . I don't buy them (sophisticated pictures) if I can get out of it."

A Contrast

Though Philip Rand of the Rex theatre at Salmon, Idaho, had not played 'X' at the time the HERALD's inquiry reached him, he adds a note pertinent to this study:

". . . Last night, Sunday, we opened with one of the finest of the sophisticated pictures . . . and took an awful licking. This was the first time I ever attempted a sophisticated play on my best night. It kept away the men and country folk. . . . We recently ran one of the simple romantic type to fine business on best days. Proving our people (i.e. the majority) want the simple romantic.

"No, sophisticated pictures don't make a dime and in fact we always lose. A few like them, the many do not."

Hays Opens Forum At Picture Club

Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA, as guest speaker, on Tuesday inaugurated the "Motion Picture Club Forum," which will meet every Tuesday for luncheon at the clubrooms in New York. For the most part, Hays' address was a partial duplication of his tenth annual report which was submitted to directors of his organization on Monday, and published elswhere in this issue. Deviating from the report, Hays voiced optimism as to the future, concluding with the cryptic remark: "It's not the size of the dog in the fight, but the size of fight in the dog."

"I face the future of the motion picture business in the highest hope," Hays told the club gathering. "The industry has its skid chains on;—its feet are on the ground," he said. "The big problem is to make pictures, they'll get the crowds; when serious problems are regarded as such, they cease to be serious."

This new activity at New York's Motion Picture Club, located at 1560 Broadway, is open to all in the industry. It is intended to arrange for one or more important personages to address each gathering. The purpose of the "forum" is to "promote closer relationship" between those in the industry and between the industry and other branches of national endeavor.

John W. Alicoate, publisher of Film Daily, and vice president of the club, will be in charge of the sessions. He will be assisted by Col. Edward Schiller, of Metro, and Charles L. O'Reilly. At the first luncheon "forum" this week, a record turnout overcrowded the clubrooms.

BIP's 200 BRITISH HOUSES TO BE USED AS AN OPENING WEDGE IN U. S.

P. A. Powers Sailing Soon to Complete Deal for Sizable Share in British International and Wardour Companies

Proceeding on the theory that English companies can break into the motion picture market in America only by using their theatre properties in Britain as a trading wedge in effecting booking deals in both countries, P. A. Powers, of New York, and British International Pictures, Ltd., London, have reached the half-way mark in a series of negotiations, which, the principals believe, will result in probably the first important effort pointing toward widespread distribution of British talkers in the United States exclusively through an American concern. Heretofore, English companies, and those of other foreign countries, principally Germany, have tried repeatedly to market product here through their own agencies, on a wholesale scale. Only recently Ufa-Films, of Berlin, gave up its New York agency in favor of releasing through Leo Brecher, sponsor of an Eastern "little theatre" movement and importer of foreign films. In addition, countless attempts have been made over a period of years to interest American distributors in foreign product, but to date nothing tangible has been accomplished.

Sailing to Get Share in B.I.P.

In a deal closed suddenly last week, P. A. Powers, motion picture pioneer and financier, established a new company, Powers Pictures, Inc., to exclusively handle BIP product on the American market through his own national exchange system which is now being established, and within one week Powers will sail for London to consummate final negotiations which he hopes will give him a sizeable share of the important BIP and co-related Wardour interests in England

BIP, after a rather brief career here, will no longer be known by that name in the United States. The American branch is now in process of liquidation by Powers, who purchased all of the corporation's local assets, including franchises with various independent exchanges throughout the country, negative rights on product now in America and sundry other contractual obligations.

BIP of England has made no investment in the Powers concern. This is not surprising in view of Powers' long-established reputation for operating alone. The London unit likewise has no voice in policies of the new American corporation, although John Maxwell, head of BIP, has been named a board member by Powers.

Powers already has established exchanges at New York, Chicago and Buffalo and ten others will be opened immediately in the more important key centers, he said. The New England franchise will continue in the hands of Max Schooling, Boston financier, and possibly a few other existing agreements will be left untouched. However, there are some deals with state right exchanges which will be terminated by Powers in favor of his own branches. Temporarily, the company plans to operate with less than 20 exchanges, the remainder of the country being covered by sub-exchanges or shipping centers.

Powers said this week that he will not produce and it is unlikely that he will distribute product of American independents, although he does intend to acquire features for export to London and BIP.

"The pending deal whereby I may purchase a part of the BIP-Wardour interests in England," Powers said, "is intended to bring both companies closer together and to give me an official voice in the company abroad whose product I will distribute here, so that I may instill in that product certain American ideas of production for American audiences." He has not yet discussed with the British executives the possibility of a deal whereby his Powers Cinephone recording equipment might be installed at the studios at Elstree, near London, in place of the present RCA Photophone equipment.

Trading Wedge in Theatres

Powers' contract for distribution here will not allow him to attempt to effect distribution deals with national companies, but Powers and the Maxwell interests plan to use the 200 BIP houses in England and Scotland as a trading wedge to obtain playing dates in the United States from national circuits of companies which distribute in England. BIP has houses in more than 60 cities widely scattered throughout the British Isles.

The personnel of the new Powers Pictures, Inc., has not been completed. Powers is president and he will be assisted in executive operation and financing affairs by David A. O'Malley, long associated with Powers. A general sales manager has not been selected but the name of E. A. Eschmann has been recently mentioned. Powers said that he is dickering with Eschmann for the post. Lou Guimond is one of the few executives who has been taken over from the old BIP staff. He will continue in charge of advertising, exploitation, publicity and promotion.

George Dillon, former Pathe district manager, and later with Springer-Cocalis circuit and DuArt laboratory, in New York, was named New York branch manager this week. F. Ray Powers and Fred A. Rice are in charge at Albany and Buffalo, respectively. Ray Powers was for two years secretary-treasurer of Powers Cinephone Equipment Corporation, while Rice is a former New York state exhibitor and upstate distributor of Cinephone equipment.

The company will select a minimum of 20 BIP pictures out of 30 for its initial season, 1932-33, and it is possible that Powers will also handle several series of BIP short subjects. Powers said that he hopes to strengthen the market possibilities of the product by contracting for Hollywood stars, directors, writers and technicians for appearances in and work on BIP's productions at Elstree.

British International Pictures, Ltd., and associated companies abroad have 10,000 stockholders, according to Maxwell. Its theatres, operated through a subsidiary called A. B. C. Theatres, Ltd., have approximately 165,000 seats. To date the company has made 56 features at its Elstree studios and regularly employs 600 exclusive of professionals. Wardour Films, Ltd., is the distributing concern in Great Britain and has a personnel totaling 200. Ellstree has been in operation about four years.

Circuit of 200 Theatres in England and Scotland Would Be Factor for Obtaining Play Dates in United States

Career Began Before General Film

Headed by Maxwell as chairman, the concern is operated principally by C. Elders, as supervising chief of Elstree; J. A. Thorpe, general production manager, and Arthur Dent, who is managing director of distribution.

The career of P. A. Powers in the picture business dates back before the organization of General Film Company and the Motion Picture Patents Company, which organization Powers opposed in the famous patents fight. His early pictures were known as Powers Picture Plays, which company he merged with Universal, together with a number of independent producing companies. He continued with Universal for six years and sold out to Carl Laemmle when he was one of Universal's largest stockholders. He then became associated with Robertson-Cole Company, changing its name to Film Booking Offices of America. The company later merged with Keith-Albee and, after its sale to the Radio interests, became the nucleus of the present RKO organization.

In the meantime, sound came along and Powers launched on the market his Cinephone recording and reproducing equipment. In the past two years or more he has been inactive.

Atkinson To Join Fox Theatres Corp.

William Atkinson will join Fox Theatres Corporation next week in "an important executive capacity," according to a Fox official who would not confirm or deny reports that Atkinson will assume the presidency. The election of Atkinson, which will mark his return to the business after brief retirement, is expected to occur late this week and is slated to be announced following a special meeting of the directors of the theatre company at a meeting to be held this week.

Former general manager of Metro in the days prior to the absorption of Goldwyn Pictures by that company, Atkinson was for several years vice-president and general manager of Roxy Theatres Corporation. Since his contract was settled some time ago, Atkinson has been out of the business and has been living in retirement in Virginia.

AYLESWORTH MADE RKO PRESIDENT; BROWN IN AN ADVISORY CAPCITY

Radio Comes To Screenland And Adventures Enroute

A picture of the complexities of the impingement of the great electrical interests summarized in the words "General Electric" upon the motion picture, evolved in terms of the group of picture producing, distributing and exhibiting organizations known as "R-K-O," is presented in the headlines of the news pages of Motion Picture Herald since November of 1931. Involved in the background are the rivalries of the two great electrical interests, the die-hard spirit of older picture institutions, the pressure of the crystallizing institution of radio and the ambitions of many men. The story in headlines follows:

WEEK BEGINNING NOVEMBER 1, 1931—

Letters to stockholders indicate $11,600,000 in new financing is neded in December.

WEEK BEGINNING NOVEMBER 14—

RKO at financial crisis and General Counsel B. B. Kahane calls in the press to "tell all" concerning stormy three-year career of the company which he says will jeopardize its future unless stockholders ratify new financing plan. Receivership mentioned. Parent RCA company advances $1,000,000. Minority stockholders threaten fight as move is launched by RKO to get proxies favoring refinancing plan.

William Le Baron reported resigning; denied.

Studio retrenchment begins, resulting in resignations of Harry Hoyt, director; Miles Connelly, producer; Tim Whelan, writer; Joseph Miles; Anthony Coldeway, writer; Paul Stein, director; Charles Whittaker, Graham John, writers.

Pandro Berman becomes Selznick's assistant.

WEEK BEGINNING NOVEMBER 21—

Minority stockholders' fight against refinancing program continues.

Reports of government investigation of Radio-Pathe merger.

Reginald Smith acquires PDC in England to distribute RKO and Pathe.

WEEK BEGINNING NOVEMBER 28—

Application made at Baltimore for receiver for RKO. Brown denies mismanagement charges contained in application.

RKO employes drafted for drive for proxies for refinancing plan, which Brown says will assure future of corporation if passed.

Brown, back from Hollywood, faces barrage of questions from reporters on company's financial status, during which Brown voiced a plea to the press to obtain public aid for refinancing plan. He promises product improvements next year.

RKO-Pathe home office staff reduced by 150; transfer from old Pathe headquarters to RKO's offices on Broadway is completed.

Tom Gorman, sales contact for RKO theatres, and Lou Schnitzer, in charge of Pathe accessories, resign.

WEEK BEGINNING DECEMBER 5—

Senator Dill says he will ask senatorial investigation of merger.

WEEK BEGINNING DECEMBER 12—

Stockholders ratify RCA's plan for refinancing RKO to extent of $11,600,000. Brown says he is gratified.

Minority holder files second receivership application at Baltimore.

WEEK BEGINNING DECEMBER 19—

Answering application for receivership, RKO claims it has ample funds to pay debts, following adoption of refinancing plan.

Myron Robinson, RKO theatre executive, denies he will succeed Joseph Plunkett as theatre head. Harold B. Franklin named as Plunkett's successor; denied at home office.

WEEK BEGINNING DECEMBER 26—

General upheaval working its way through RKO picture divisions reaches vaudeville department, resulting in Martin Beck becoming an executive in that branch.

Vaudeville added in ten RKO houses in sudden spurt to strengthen that branch of entertainment.

Charles R. Rogers resigns production post and vice-presidency.

Karl Hoblitzelle, Charles Pettijohn mentioned as possible RKO executives.

Kahane President of Radio Pictures; Franklin Heads K-A-O & Orpheum Circuit, Plunkett and Reisman Vice-Presidents

Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Company, was elected president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, succeeding Hiram S. Brown, at a meeting of the board of directors of RKO, late Wednesday afternoon. Brown continues with RKO as a member of the board and will act in an advisory capacity to Aylesworth.

Other executive elections were: Benjamin B. Kahane, as vice-president of RKO and president of RKO Radio Pictures; Harold B. Franklin, president of Keith-Albee-Orpheum and Orpheum Circuit, and Joseph Plunkett and Phil Reisman as vice-presidents of Keith-Albee-Orpheum and Orpheum Circuit.

Coordinate Activities

These, with additional executive elections which draw into RKO figures high in the parent electrical companies, complete the executive reorganization of RKO and subsidiaries, and coordinate the motion picture, radio and theatre activities of Radio Corporation of America under Aylesworth's direction, with the future executive activities centering at Radio City.

Aylesworth, who also remains president of NBC, assumed his new duties at RKO on the morning following the election. He also becomes chairman of the boards of RKO Radio Pictures, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, and Orpheum Circuit. David Sarnoff, president of RCA, was re-elected chairman of the board of RKO and chairman of its executive committee. Owen D. Young, chairman of the board of General Electric, and a member of the board of RKO, was elected a member of the executive committee of RKO. Gerard Swope, president of General Electric, and Andrew W. Robertson, chairman of the board of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, were elected members of the board and of the executive committee of RKO.

Activities Inter-related

David Sarnoff, in a statement issued immediately following the meeting, said:

"The activities of the National Broadcasting Company in the field of entertainment are so inter-related with the general entertainment field that it was felt the requirements of efficiency and economy would be served by the coordination of both entertainment interests under one president.

"Mr. Aylesworth has been a member of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation board since its organization and is intimately familiar with the company's policies and activities. Many outstanding entertainment features as well known on the theatrical stage as on the air have been developed under his administration."

Sarnoff announced the completion of the

MEXICO THEATRES, HEAVILY TAXED, FEAR NEW IMPOST WILL CLOSE DOORS

Industry Unable to Adjust Itself to 1,000 Per Cent Increase in Import Duties Which Is to Go Into Effect April 17

By JAMES LOCKHART, Mexico City

That old one about the 100 per cent certainty of death and taxes goes for Mexico as well as other countries. But, in that land of sunshine, and other things, there obtains a variation of the second half of the venerable adage. Exhibitors in Mexico have plenty imposts, but the variation thing is afforded by the uncertainty as to new levies that will be handed out.

Every now and then the municipal and national governments pounce upon the motion picture industry as a fruitful means of garnering more shekels for their coffers, so much so that taxes now constitute one of the greatest outlays distributors and exhibitors in the land immediately south of the Rio Grande have to face.

A Heavy Assessment

Federal and civic taxes and extra levies cost one of the larger first-run Mexico City houses the equivalent of $20,000 to $25,000 a year. That slice to the income is comparatively small for a big house in a first-class American city, but in Mexico, where business is necessarily rather limited, it is a formidable item. An idea of the ratio of customers to population in Mexico is afforded by the fact that the national capital, which has a few thousand more than 1,000,000 inhabitants, or one-sixteenth of the Republic's population, musters but about 80,000 men, women and children to whom exhibitors may reasonably look for support. The great bulk of this picture public attend the picture houses once a week. Admission charges in Mexico have to be comparatively low. The highest that first-run theatres can charge for ordinary pictures is a top of around 35 cents for the orchestra, with a 40 to 50 cent maximum for the same locality for super-features. The important neighborhood houses dare not charge more than 30 cents Sundays and 20 cents other days.

The federal government collects 10 per cent of gross receipts at the end of each day, seven days a week. It wants its money almost as soon as the coins trickle into the box offices. When the treasurers count the day's receipts, up bobs a collector from the national government treasury department.

The houses have to pay a substantial land tax, too. And now there is a new and rather funny assessment, which has been figured out by the Mexico City civic authorities. The municipal law demands that an inspector, to ascertain that everything is being conducted in full accordance with the regulations, is assigned to each motion picture theatre. The new levy consists of each exhibitor being obliged to pay the daily salary of this inspector, and 20 per cent of that amount besides to cover collection, bookkeeping and other costs. The pay of the inspectors varies from the equivalent of $2.10 to $2.60 a day, according to the calibre of the house in which he officiates.

And Now the Last Straw

While these accumulated imposts cut heavily into the exhibitors' revenues, another and more serious is in the offing for all concerned with the industry in Mexico. This is a measure which was created last fall and provides for increasing the import levies on all films and discs in languages other than Spanish from around $2.50 the kilo to some $25 for that amount. The idea of this 1,000 per cent boost in these import duties is to protect the infant Mexican motion picture production industry and to give right-of-way to "talkies" and silents in the official language of the country. Effectment of this drastic measure was postponed until April 21 by President Pascual Ortiz Rubio after a group of representatives of importers, distributors and exhibitors had waited upon him. The postponement was granted to give the industry an opportunity to adjust itself to the proposition.

It seems that the industry has not been able to do that, and in the opinion of those in the industry in Mexico City there is but scant hope that the government will reconsider this measure; instead, they expect to be fully enforced on and after April 21. Industry members contend that such an elevation of import levies will prohibit the entrance of anything not in Spanish into Mexico and as screen entertainment in that tongue is much in the minority, effectment of the statute will force the closing of practically all Mexican film houses.

Martha Hays, Sister of MPPDA President, Dies in Hollywood

Miss Martha Hays, sister of Will H. Hays, died on Tuesday at Hollywood where she had gone to live two years ago, from the Hays homestead at Sullivan, Indiana.

Miss Hays was 58 years old and was the only sister of the MPPDA president. She died at the Good Samaritan Hospital, of complications which followed a major operation. For 22 years Miss Hays was associated with her brothers, Will and Hinkle, in the law firm of Hays and Hays at Sullivan.

Canada Adopts Standard Contract; Only Few Changes

A modified form of standard exhibition contract for Canada was finally adopted this week at a conference in Toronto which terminated a series of several meetings in recent weeks. The work of revision was undertaken shortly after the handing down of the judgment by Justice Garrow in the "combines" trial, in which judgment the principle of arbitration was upheld. There are no drastic changes in the new contract form.

$15,200,000 Claim Filed by Fox Unit Against Gaumont

An echo to the important Gaumont-Fox deal of a few years ago was heard in London this week when Fox Film Corporation and the United American Investment Corporation issued a writ in England seeking recovery from the Gaumont British holding company of approximately £4,000,000 (about $15,200,000 at the present rate of exchange), which was contributed by Fox in financing and investing in shares of Gaumont British about three years ago. The claim is understood to be based on a misunderstanding over contractual terms between the Gaumont interests and Fox and the investment corporation.

Action of the Fox interests was disclosed from London on Wednesday and up to press time no one at the Fox home office in New York was aware of the claim having been filed.

The defendants are a private holding company and Isidore Ostrer, president of the Gaumont British Picture Corporation. Both are being sued as members of the Metropolis and Bradford Trust, which was established several years ago after an agreement with the Fox interests. The trust acquired 3,105,000 of the 5,000,000 shares in the Gaumont British Picture Corporation, but sole voting rights were vested in 10,000 A shares of the trust.

Brown Is Gallup's Successor at Columbia; Gallup With Agency

George Brown, formerly with Fox and RKO in the theatre department, has been appointed advertising, publicity and exploitation director at Columbia, succeeding Bruce Gallup, resigned, who next week joins Donahue and Coe, Inc., advertising agency handling national advertising for MGM, Fox, the Loew and Fox theatres and the Roxy theatre.

The Donahue and Coe agency, headed by Edward Churchill, has made other additions to the personnel, including: E. M. Ahlstrand, formerly with Lawrence Fertig Agency; George R. Titus, formerly at Lord and Thomas & Logan; Fred Waters, formerly at the J. P. Miller advertising agency; Oliver A. Kingsbury of the Brearley advertising agency; William Williams, of First National and later at Lord and Thomas & Logan; Frank Droesch, former Pathe artist.

American Society of Cinematographers, at the annual meeting this week at Hollywood, re-elected John Arnold president; Arthur Miller and Frank Good vice-presidents, and Elmer Dwyer, treasurer.

PARAMOUNT COSTS CUT 11 MILLION; HOLDERS TO VOTE ON STOCK PLAN

Six Blocks of Stock, Each 108,000 Shares, for Six Months Service, Set Aside for Purchase by Chief Executives

Operating costs of Paramount Publix Corporation and subsidiaries are now $11,000,000 per annum less than one year ago. Results of operating economies by the management and details of a new stock plan for employees, intended to maintain "organization morale," are made known by Adolph Zukor, president, in a letter to stockholders.

The company's annual meeting is scheduled to be held at headquarters in New York on Tuesday, April 19, at noon, when new directors will be elected. Stockholders will vote on the action of the board of directors in authorizing the proposed employees' stock plan and they will also act on a proposal to change the presently authorized 4,000,000 shares of no par common into 4,000,000 shares with a par value of $10. Stockholders of record of April 4 will be entitled to vote.

Zukor Points to Economies

In outlining the nature of the proposed stock plan for employees, and of other business to be voted upon at the forthcoming meting, Zukor said to stockholders:

"Recently there was mailed to you the consolidated balance sheet and profit and loss account of the corporation for the fiscal year ending December 26, 1931. The results show a net profit for the year of $6,345,488, equal to $2.02 per share. The motion picture industry, in common with practically all other business, suffered a drastic decline in gross revenues during the year. Anticipating this decline in gross, the executives of the corporation entered upon a policy of stringent retrenchment and expense reduction in the early part of 1931. Pursuant thereto, salaries of all employees of the corporation and its subsidiaries were substantially reduced on June 1, 1931, making in the aggregate a difference in salary expense of approximately $2,000,000 annually. On January 1, 1931 an additional salary cut was made amounting to approximately $300,000 annually. Many of the officers and employees whose salaries were thus reduced were important factors in the management of the corporation and were under contract for a period of years. These executives, together with the rank and file of the employees, accepted the reductions with a fine spirit of loyalty and have given, without stint, their best efforts to the organization. Other reductions in the operating expenses of the corporation and its subsidiaries have been made, so that at the present time the corporation is conducting its business on a basis upon which its total operating expenses are approximately at the rate of $11,000,000 per annum less than they were last year at this time.

A Profit-Sharing Plan

"In the opinion of the board of directors it would be of great benefit to the corporation in maintaining organization morale to provide that the employees (who have made and are making these sacrifices, in addition to having lost large sums of money in the purchase of the capital stock of the corporation at $52 per share upon the employees' stock purchase plan authorized by the stockholders several years ago) be compensated to some extent in proportion to the future success of the corporation. With this in view, the board of directors has appointed a committee of its members to work out a profit-sharing plan for employees of the corporation and its subsidiaries.

"Subject to approval by the stockholders, employment contracts are being entered into with some of the principal executives of the corporation, who will not participate in the profit-sharing plan, under which six blocks of stock, each block consisting of a total of 108,000 shares for all such executives, will be set aside, one block for each six months' service between January 1, 1932, and December 31, 1934, for issue to such executives on payment by them in cash of $15, $18, $21, $24, $28, and $32 per share for the respective blocks. The right of each executive to take up his respective share of each block extends to December 31, 1935, but is conditioned upon his having continued in the employ of the corporation during the six months' period for which each block is reserved. Thus, in proportion to the success of these officers in their management of the corporation, they will be able to take up stock of the corporation upon making cash payments which may be less than market prices then prevailing, but which are very greatly in excess of the present market prices, such cash payment in respect of the first block being more than twice the present market price.

Stock Change Proposal

"Some of the officers with whom these contracts have been made have heretofore had contracts by which they were entitled to receive, as part of their compensation, a percentage of the profits of the corporation. Upon approval of the new contracts, these officers will surrender all future rights under the prior profit-sharing contracts.

"It is further proposed to change the shares of the stock of the corporation from shares without par value to shares having a par value of $10, which will result in an aggregate outstanding capital stock of approximately $33,000,000. This amount is materially less than both the present capital of the corporation and what the directors believe to be the intrinsic value of the shares, and hence the proposed change will create a substantial corporate surplus. It will, in addition, reduce the amount of the stock transfer tax payable by stockholders on sales of stock of the corporation.

"A vote of two-thirds of the capital stock, represented either in person or by proxy, is required to make the change in capitalization from no par to par value stock and I, therefore, urge that if you cannot be present in person, you sign and immediately return the enclosed proxy for the annual meeting, at which meeting the matters mentioned in the proxy will be considered in addition to the usual formal business of the meeting."

Wanger Sees New "Sophistication" Coming to Screen

A new type of sophistication is destined for the screen. "Sophistication," as the term is known in the film industry, is killing off box office values and will have no part in Columbia's production schedule. Rather, the "new sophistication" will give the public an insight into the currents and crosscurrents of American life.

Walter Wanger, vice-president of Columbia Pictures, delivered these observations while in Kansas City for an overnight stop last week on his way to New York, where he will remain for two weeks before returning to the Coast. He had been in Hollywood for five weeks discussing production with President Harry Cohen.

Wanger is extremely enthusiastic about his company's production plans. He is fearful of the word "sophisticated." "I think that word will drive thousands away from the box office," he said, "because it has been misused so grossly by theatrical interests. 'Sophisticated' has come to mean a certain atmosphere of too many fish forks and too well-fitted dress suits. It has come to mean a play in which two people who are worried over a hanging, spend their time talking about Greek verse. That is not 'sophisticated' but affected. The public is sick of it because it is phony."

Accordingly, said Wanger, Columbia's production schedule calls for pictures of this type.

Universal Will Make Film in Greenland, Another in Straits

Universal plans to make two expeditionary pictures this year, one in Greenland and the other in the Malay Peninsula. Carl Laemmle is outfitting an Arctic ship at Copenhagen for the Arctic expedition, which will be directed by Dr. Arnold Franck, who is on his way to the Coast to confer with Laemmle. The film is tentatively titled "Iceberg." The Danish government will cooperate.

The Malay expedition will be under the direction and supervision of Wong Wellesley, whose novel, "Pagan River," will be adapted for the screen. The expedition is expected to leave Universal City about June 1.

Johnson To Handle Foreign Sale of Principal Feature

E. Bruce Johnson, for some years foreign manager of First National Pictures, Inc., has been signed by Principal Distributing Corporation, to handle the foreign rights to Zane Grey's film, "South Sea Adventures."

executive reorganization of RKO in the following statement:

"With the recent appointments of David O. Selznick as production head at the Hollywood studios of the company; Martin Beck in charge of vaudeville operations; Ned E. Depinet in charge of sales and distribution of pictures; Phil Reisman in charge of picture buying; Robert F. Sisk in charge of advertising and publicity, and Courtland Smith, president of Pathe News, the action taken by the board today completes the reorganization of the executive personnel undertaken after the financial reorganization of the company was approved by stockholders in December, 1931."

Following is a condensed record of the career of the new president of RKO:

Home—812 Park Avenue, New York City; Office, National Broadcasting Company Building, 711 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

See Goodman Promotion

Among the collection of biographies and photographs of executives who figure in the new RKO alignment were included those of Maurice Goodman, a veteran member of the RKO legal department. The inclusion strengthened the belief that Goodman will be named to succeed B. B. Kahane as general counsel for RKO, an appointive office, in the near future, although mention of the attorney was not made in the official announcement of the company.

Aylesworth, who was at his RKO desk at 10 a. m., on the morning following the meeting at which he was elected president, expressed confidence in the opportunities afforded by the coordination of radio, picture and theatre enterprises.

"The coordination of radio broadcasting, stage and screen entertainment is logical and highly desirable," he said. "They are naturally associated and each will benefit the other.

"While the National Broadcasting and Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporations' organizations will be entirely separate, there is a great opportunity to coordinate these two forces in meeting the demands of the public."

"Radio City, at Rockefeller Center now under construction," he continued, "will contain the largest and most complete radio broadcasting headquarters in the world. Twenty-seven studios and offices will occupy 500,000 square feet in the main Radio Building, seventy stories in height."

Asher Levy has been appointed supervising director of the 30 theatres in the Chicago and Omaha divisions of RKO. Charles Koerner is now Southern division manager, at Dallas. RKO plans to experiment with a straight film policy.

RKO will present exclusive first-runs of at least 15 Soviet films at the RKO Cameo, New York, in a deal with Amkino.

Word also came from Hollywood late Wednesday that announcement had been made by David O. Selznick, production chief, indicating the abandonment of the supervisory system of making pictures and the further announcement that a complete reorganization of the production staff would be made. Selznick said, "The tendency now is for closer contact between producer and director and writer without the middle executive. This is no reflection upon the capabilities of men holding supervisory posts."

Effective within a week, Pandro Berman will assist Selznick, Edward J. Montagne will become scenario editor, Kenneth MacGowan story editor. Harry Joe Brown has resigned and will join Charles R. Rogers. Willis Goldbeck and James K. McGuiness are given writing assignments.

Canadian Official Starts a Crusade Against U. S. Films

Calling upon the Orange Order to rise in defense of Canada against the propaganda of banditry and corruption as depicted in American pictures, Attorney General W. H. Price of Ontario opened in Toronto this week an official crusade against the insidious influence of American films. He declared the American film influence as threatening the very foundation of all ideals held dear by the Canadian people.

Price declared the situation extremely serious and said Canadians must be roused to a sense of peril from this film propaganda. He said, however, he was not reflecting on those who show American films because there were practically no others to show.

Price said: "We are seeing a new era in the medium of transmission of ideas and thoughts and the most insidious influence is the motion picture. The scenes do not portray our national life, our institutions, our public figures, but show life and actions of a foreign country."

Price referred to "chaotic conditions in the States," the graft and corruption there, and the breaking down of the administration of justice and compared that with the soundness and stability of Canadian life, now threatened. He caustically declared: "One would think from seeing American films that murder and corruption were the only things existing south of the line. I hope to God we won't have American ideals and thoughts. Sometimes I think the three great institutions, school, church and press have been chiselled away by talkies. Are we going to be an adjunct of the American people taking our cue from them. I never see a film but what it contains shooting, excessive use of liquor and immorality. Our parliamentary, religious and educational institutions must be safeguarded. We must not allow them to be corrupted."

Toronto newspapers gave prominent space to the declaration. Mayor Stewart of Toronto said: "I think the people of the Dominion owe an everlasting debt of gratitude to the attorney general."

TYING-IN SHORTS WITH FEATURES IS LAWFUL, LEGAL OPINION HOLDS

Upheld in Appeals Court Decision, Is Conclusion; Lightman Expresses Hope Distributors Won't Take Advantage of It

Responsible legal opinion holds that the tying-in of short subjects with feature sales is pronounced legal in the U. S. circuit court of appeals opinion returned last week, which ended the Federal Trade Commission's block booking litigation against Paramount. Differing interpretations of the federal court's opinion induced large distributors to seek the advice of competent counsel on this phase of the block booking opinion, and authoritative advice holds that application of the practice rests solely on the choice of individual company policy.

"Although the appeal court's opinion obviously is based on a state of facts which did not embrace the sale of short subjects," said one legal authority, "it requires only a short, logical extension of legal opinion to find that shorts and features could be sold together legally, and that distributors could tell exhibitors to 'take everything or nothing' and be within their legal rights in doing so. The advisability of taking advantage of this situation, however, is purely a matter of policy for individual companies to decide."

Lightman Urges Cooperation

M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, who conferred with sales executives last week on relief from the practice of "tie-ins," voiced the hope that distributors would not take advantage of the new situation in formulating or carrying out new sales policies.

"The mere fact that the distributors apparently have the decision of the U. S. Court behind them," said Lightman, "should not lessen our chances for cooperation in regard to the sale of features and shorts separately and with some latitude of selectivity.

"The entire structure of the MPTOA," he continued, "is founded upon the principle that even though we may from time to time have the legal right to combat certain so-called distributor or circuit evils, we have never availed ourselves of that right, but rather have always contended that adjustments should be made by and within the industry itself. By the same token, if distributors appreciate that sort of cooperation, surely when the situation is reversed they can ill afford to take advantage of it and merely say that they are within their legal rights."

Reports Progress Made

Lightman reported that progress had been made in obtaining distributor cooperation to end the tying-in practice, which he described as one of the most bitterly assailed policies discussed at the recent MPTOA convention.

Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied States Association, issued a statement describing the circuit court block booking opinion as "academic" and, criticizing the Federal Trade Commission's handling of the case, said that it would be made the subject of an inquiry and report under Senate bill 170, authored by Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart.

Myers' description of the opinion as "academic" is based, he says, on the fact that the evidence introduced in the case related to conditions prior to 1925, since which time changes in the industry have been of sufficient significance to alter the entire situation. He declares "the decision removes the last obstacle to the enactment of Senate bill 3770, the Brookhart anti-block booking bill, since there is no further hope of relief from federal agencies under existing law and all who are interested in the subject must now direct their efforts towards the passage of the bill."

Myers' statement was taken to indicate that Allied does not believe the Federal Trade Commission will appeal the case to the supreme court. The commission has 60 days in which to apply for a writ of certiorari appealing the decision. Officials of the commission refused to comment on Allied's criticism of the handling of the case.

Iowa Allied Unit Asks Arbitration

The Allied Theatre Owners, through a letter written by Clifford Niles president of the Iowa and Nebraska unit, are requesting arbitration again in Iowa. The letter asks that the exchange men shall form an arbitrating committee.

When the Film Board arbitration committee was in effect there served on the board three exhibitors and three exchange men. Bill Eddy, who was secretary and treasurer of the MPTO when it was Iowa's only theatre men's organization and for many years was on the Film Board from his theatre at Indianola, Iowa, said he not only felt that the exhibitors were favored by the Board rulings in 90 per cent of the cases, and in every case where the exchange men could possibly do so, but that also a score of Iowa theatres would have to close because they could not bring expensive suits into regular court in many cases which easily could be settled by arbitration.

Screened Opera Production Begins at Florida Studios

The Beecroft-Florida Studios, at Tampa, has engaged the San Carlo Opera Company of New York, with 75 members, for the production of five grand opera productions. The company arrived at the Davis Island studio last week, with rehearsals starting at once.

The first production will probably be "The Barber of Seville." Four sound stages are in the course of construction at the plant.

Conclude Management Deal

The Duel Amusement Company, Dallas, and the Griffith Amusement Company, Oklahoma City, have concluded a working arrangement whereby Griffith will operate two houses which Duel recently purchased at Enid, Okla.

Program Is Set For Washington SMPE Convention

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers has formulated a tentative schedule for the semi-annual meeting to be held at Washington, D. C., May 9 to 12, at the Wardman Park Hotel. All technical sessions and film exhibitions are planned for the Little Theatre in the hotel. The banquet and dance is scheduled for the Gold Room on the evening of May 12. W. P. Connery, Massachusetts congressman, will be master of ceremonies at the banquet.

The convention will be opened on Monday, May 9, with an address of welcome and the address by the president, Alfred Goldsmith. On Wednesday, May 11, the convention will adjourn to the new auditorium of the Chamber of Commerce, where various government heads will address the meeting. Various papers of diversified interest are planned, under the supervision of O. M. Glunt, chairman of the papers committee. W. C. Kunzmann is chairman of the convention committee.

Roxy to Address SMPE

S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel has accepted an invitation to address the spring meeting of the SMPE, to be held in Washington, May 9 to 12. Rothafel will talk on "The Ideal Theatre," perhaps touching on Rockefeller Center.

Exchange Manager Dead

J. J. Patridge, San Francisco branch manager for Paramount-Publix, died at his home there on Saturday, of heart trouble. Patridge joined the company in 1916 and has been in charge of the San Francisco exchange since 1927.

Publix Promotes Barr

Maurice F. Barr, district manager of the New Orleans Saenger theatres, has been appointed director of the southwest de luxe division of Paramount-Publix. Barr will be in charge of houses in the larger Texas cities.

University Has Camera Branch

The University of Southern California has instituted a department of cinematography, including an experimental motion picture laboratory, with Boris V. Morkovin in charge.

Producing Shorts in Color

The Motion Picture Service, Inc., St. Petersburg, Fla., is producing a series of one and two reel shorts in sound and color for a national distributing organization.

NEW FILMS INCREASING POTENTIAL AUDIENCE, HAYS TELLS DIRECTORS

New Elements of Attendance Drawn, Says MPPDA President Reviewing Progress in Decade of Administration

Indicates Healthy Condition in Studios; Hints at Kindlier Appreciation of Industry by Public and Sincere Critics

While mass appeal must always remain the first consideration of producers, new pictures are constantly being made which tend to raise the standard of public entertainment and in so doing increase the "potential" motion picture audience, Will H. Hays says in his tenth annual report, submitted on Tuesday to the directors of the MPPDA. The new potential audiences are regarded by Hays as one of the industry's significant assets for the future.

The report reviews the progress of the industry and points out many of the lessons learned during the decade of Hays' administration. The industry was the only one to have to face two economic revolutions in the space of three years, Hays points out. Advent of sound, he recalls, required virtual rebuilding of the industry and, again in 1929, the depreciation of buying power affected all business.

New Elements of Attendance

"The depression, unemployment and fear for the future undoubtedly have interfered with the regular attendance at entertainment," the Hays report says. "However, survey and investigation are proving that the potential motion picture audience is being vastly increased by new elements of attendance drawn to motion picture theatres by the constantly increasing number of pictures that are raising the standard of public entertainment. Whatever further readjustments in production and distribution costs may have to be accomplished to attain the fullest possible prosperity for the industry, the inherent stability of motion picture entertainment has been proven as never before."

In his references to production attempts which, he says, "are setting entirely new styles in mass entertainment and drawing on new audience strata," Hays cites specifically "The Man Who Played God," "The Broken Lullaby," "Arrowsmith" and "Emma."

Cannot "Desert Mass for Class"

Although more and more pictures are being produced upon a higher standard of entertainment value, according to the report, this does not mean that the screen as a whole "can desert mass for class," Hays sets forth. "The screen cannot disregard practicalities and survive," he says. "The box-office delivers the final verdict on our product. Certain irreducible production and operating costs compel the screen to occupy the broader, not the narrower, areas of entertainment. It cannot become a forum, an academy or a soap-box and continue to command universal attendance. Evangelism and propaganda are not its appointed precincts."

"Ours is not an endowed institution," he continues. "No philanthropic nets are stretched beneath our financial structure to underwrite performances which are over the heads of the average audience."

The report, which maintains a note of high optimism throughout, hints at a better and more kindly appreciation of the industry by the public and sincere critics. It comments favorably on the rehabilitation of the industry where it has been affected by national depression and indicates a healthy condition in the studios just visited by Hays. The report also refers to the increasingly important part which nontheatrical pictures are coming to play in the industry. A saving of $1,000,000,000 in ten years to the American taxpayer may result from the increased efficiency and progress in public schools being effected by the use of motion pictures as an aid to teachers, Hays estimates in the report.

Better Public Understanding

Speaking of the better public understanding of the industry, Hays told the directors that "no longer do those conversant with the facts and honest in their own motivation, question either our bona fides or the overwhelming evidence of progress achieved. Specific constructive criticism of specific pictures we shall always need, but general indictments of the motion picture industry today come only from the uninformed, the malicious or those who wring a livelihood from derogation."

"In the national rehabilitation which has been in progress since November, 1929," Hays says, "the motion picture industry has done more than bear its own share of grave industrial problems. Yet there is no occasion to whine. I have just come back from the center of production and I know that the industry has weathered the storm; that we are meeting the demands of economy without reducing the speed of progress."

Mr. Hays' report will be published in three installments, of which the following is the first. Mr. Hays said.

It is now ten years since we adopted the policy of self-regulation and began to develop our program.

The problems confronting us involved our responsibilities to our stockholders, to the 20,000 exhibitors in America, to our foreign customers and to a weekly world audience of 250,000,000 people, who were given in motion pictures the entertainment they desired and the relaxation they required.

Our aims are set forth in the Articles of Incorporation of this Association filed in Albany, New York, in March, 1922:

> "The object for which the Association is created is to foster the common interests of those engaged in the motion picture industry in the United States by establishing and maintaining the highest possible and artistic standards in motion picture production;
>
> "by developing the educational as well as the entertainment value and general usefulness of the motion picture;
> "by diffusing accurate and reliable information with reference to the industry;
>
> "by reforming abuses relative to the industry, by securing freedom from unjust or unlawful exactions, and by other lawful and proper means."

This, our basic purpose, remains unaltered.

We knew ten years ago, as we know in 1932, that there will always be a profitable market for a certain quota of sensational films.

But we realized in 1922, as we realize now, that the encouragement of that market is a failure to square responsibility with opportunity and is not justified by the principles which irrevocably rule constructive effort nor by final balance sheets.

The high speed schedules of production; the peculiar intensity of competition; the short life of the product; the large investment per picture; the volatile ebb and flow of public taste in styles of entertainment;—these and other factors all tend to tempt the producer of motion pictures into mistakes of judgment and errors of execution.

In addition to these inherently unique considerations affecting our business, ours has been the only industry which has had to meet within three years the double problem of a world depression and an internal revolution. Suddenly the processes of our production, the charted methods of distribution, the implementations of exhibition, were shot to pieces by the advent of sound to the screen. Much of what we had learned became only a wavering foundation for completely new knowledge we were compelled to acquire. Much of what we had achieved—in financial stability, in artistic surety, in effective management, in establishing machinery to maintain orderly cooperation with sympathetic public leadership—became outmoded, obsolete, almost useless, overnight.

Few episodes in industrial history are so arresting as the incredible resourcefulness with which the industry reformed its mechanical, artistic, financial and administrative ranks to control the unprecedented situations created by sound. The money requirement involved an additional half billion; the investment in energy, in courage, in creative execution, cannot be measured.

Pausing a moment to commemorate the first public exposition of a sound picture—it was August 4, 1926—we must remember that scarcely three years were permitted us to develop proper implementation, generalize its availability, re-design studios, re-equip thousands of theatres and reorganize to meet altogether different foreign requirements; three years in which to conform an entirely pantomimic art to sound technique; three years to assimilate a veritable flood of new writers, of acting talent from vaudeville and the legitimate theatre and bring this swiftly recruited personnel to appreciate the necessity for and to practice the industry's self-regulation.

Then, in 1929, the United States felt the delayed impact of a critical world economic situation. We need no blue-prints of that. All our presumptions of income—presumptions which we shared in common with economists and with leaders in every field of industry—were enfiladed by the rifle fire of falling commodity prices, depressed securities and the public's buying timidity.

In the national rehabilitation which has been in progress since November, 1929, the motion picture industry has done more than bear its own share of grave industrial problems. It has conducted major efforts in support of unemployment relief; it has stimulated and aided many other such efforts; it has fulfilled an important role in the sustention of national morale. This we had to do. We could no more have quit in the face of fire than could the Federal Reserve Bank. The maintenance of an uninterrupted entertainment supply has been an imperative duty.

Our specific difficulties, our generic problems, our double exposure to financial upheaval, I recite in no spirit of whining. There is no occasion to whine. I have just come back from the center of production and I know that the industry has weathered the storm; that we are meeting the demands of economy without reducing the speed of progress, putting a clamp upon enterprise or damming the free flow of creative effort, without which recovery would be impossible.

However, in view of the superabundant obstacles which you have had to overcome in the past few years, I wish on this tenth annual occasion to express to you my very sincere gratitude for the steadfastness with which you have held to the spirit and practice of the aims to which you subscribed in 1922.

I recall the more than two hundred financially successful books and plays which you have rejected for screen treatment because you deemed them unworthy of the self-imposed standards of motion picture entertainment.

I bear in mind the 787 scripts, books and synopses which during last year you have submitted to those charged with the interpretation of the industry's Production Code and I am aware that during this same year your representatives at the studio have participated in hundreds of conferences with officers of your Association, in every case discussing earnestly and conscientiously problems of story revision, frequently sacrificing present profits, because of a considered determination to build the future on an enlightened concept of responsibility to, and for, social progress.

Proof of Motion Picture Progress

No longer do those conversant with the facts and honest in their own motivation question either our bona fides or the overwhelming evidence of progress achieved. Specific constructive criticism of specific pictures we shall always need and I hope and expect we shall always have it, but general indictments of the motion picture industry today come

IMPROVING STANDARDS REFLECTED

only from the uninformed, the malicious or those who earn a livelihood by derogation.

We do not have to argue the fact of the screen's improvement. The proof of everything in our business lies in the product. Behind that testimony no critic can go.

Instantly one thinks of:

> Arrowsmith, the dramatic typification of the finest ideals of science.
> Broken Lullaby, presenting with equal vigor the struggle of an individual soul and of the world at large for true peace.
> Alexander Hamilton, marking a new phase in biography.
> The Champ, Emma, Skippy, Sooky, The Expert, all nearly perfect in their depiction of the simple, homely and priceless qualities of everyday life.
> Street Scene, a view of current humanity, to which the historian of the future will be able to turn as to no written document.
> Around the World in 80 Minutes, Tabu, Rango, Trader Horn, Tarzan, new chapters in the drama of travel and wild life.
> Cimarron, reviving a period of our national history.
> Shanghai Express, unusual, tumultuous, an exprominent in the plastic art of the screen.
> Outward Bound, marvelous in its psychological presentation.
> The Lost Squadron, Hell Divers, X Marks the Spot, Arsene Lupin, more indices of the new possibilities for melodrama.
> Ladies of the Jury, scintillant humor.
> Law and Order, presenting the Great West in a new light.
> This Is the Night, joining music and comedy.
> The Spirit of Notre Dame, Young America, Maker of Men, The Sin of Madelon Claudet, Bad Girl, The Star Witness, Heart of New York, Devotion, portraying vividly the broad proportions and the inter-relations of human life and emotion.

And just ahead of us:

> Grand Hotel, Brothers Karamazov, Symphony of Six Million, So Big, The Miracle Man, Wet Parade.

Here is sturdy accomplishment for any art. Perhaps such lists of specific titles, impressive as they are, serve less definitely to illustrate progress than does consideration of certain new types of pictures. Important expansion and intensification of cooperative work with public spirited groups who are aiding to raise the standard of demand has resulted in our ability successfully to market an appreciable quantity of so-called "socially valuable entertainment" which even five years ago almost invariably forecast the use of red ink in a producing company's bookkeeping department. Interesting of these type of pictures are: "The Man Who Played God," "Donovan's Kid," "Compromise," "The Champ," "Broken Lullaby," "Emma" and "Arrowsmith."

In the field of improving the quality of the supply of pictures, we have progressed far indeed from the time when we labored to work out the first eliminations of certain types of scenes and such primary principles as that punishment must follow crime.

Today those standards, maintained and regarded as a matter of course, do not alone satisfy us.

With increasing frequency the screen presents an affirmative and spiritual philosophy of life.

In the field of improving the quality of demand we have also progressed far since the day, not so long ago, when Warner Brothers filmed Disraeli in the resigned expectation that financial loss would result—and their fears proved eminently correct.

Today, motion pictures appealing to the most cultivated tastes are being produced with a high brand of artistry and are receiving active support from those in the community who have wisely turned their energies from futile carping to channels of constructive cooperation.

Varied Entertainment Appeal

I have no desire to minimize the tasks still ahead of us, nor the fact that only a prosperous public can mean a fully prosperous industry. But when the country has resumed its forward stride the story of courage and vision displayed by the motion picture industry in the hours of national crisis will be emphasized.

The most significant fact of progress shown by the motion picture industry during the present period is in the variety and reach of its entertainment appeal. The depression, unemployment and fear for the future undoubtedly have interfered with the regular attendance at entertainment, as essential as food, light and heat to men, women and children driven by the stress of modern life. But survey and investigation are proving beyond doubt that the potential motion picture audience is being vastly increased by new elements of attendance drawn to motion picture theatres by the constantly increasing number of pictures that are raising the standards of public entertainment.

Whatever further readjustments in production and distribution costs may have to be accomplished to attain the fullest possible prosperity for the industry, the inherent stability of motion picture entertainment has been proven as never before.

Public buying paralysis has prostrated many industries and it is only with signs of renewed confidence that these are beginning to pick-up. Underconsumption has placed a problem before the country of alleged over-production. But the one thing we of the motion picture industry cannot do is to produce too much good entertainment. Even in the worst days of the depression the very exceptional entertainment film does not lack an audience. We simply cannot make too many really good pictures. The mistake we can make is to assume, and to assume without basis, that any given type of entertainment fare will satisfy always and for all time any given segment of the vast entertainment audience served by the screen. Every picture produced upon a higher standard of entertainment value is lifting by that much the standard of public appreciation for pictures of the better kind, which in turn must lift the standard of achievement by the motion picture industry.

Screen Practicalities

But this does not mean that the screen as a whole can desert mass for class.

In making their entertainment appeal to the highest common denominator of public acceptance, motion pictures simply follow in the footsteps of standard literature, substantial drama and the best of widely-circulated periodicals.

The screen cannot disregard practicalities and survive. Or justify to common sense or balance sheet flights into rarified atmosphere.

Certain irreducible production and operating costs compel its occupation of the broader, not the narrower, areas of entertainment. It cannot become a forum, an academy or a soap-box and continue to command universal attendance. It steps out of character into disastrous experience when it invades controversial ground.

Evangelism and propaganda are not its appointed precincts.

Time and experience will increasingly confirm the soundness of these postulates. And if we ever depart from them, we shall pay the piper instead of dividends.

Ours is not an endowed institution. No philanthropic nets are stretched beneath our financial structure to underwrite performances over the heads of the average audience.

The box-office delivers the final verdict on our product. But we cannot permit the box-office entirely to determine the character of productions. The box-office can only say "yes" or "no." We cannot disregard it and survive. We must give the public the entertainment which interests a sustaining majority of the people. But the box-office gives us no conclusive measure of the opportunity for better pictures. That must be determined by enterprise, courage, and faith.

Social Conscience

We cannot defy social conscience and hope to prosper but we inherit from the Constitution by way of Magna Charta the inalienable right of every man within his own castle to resist unwarranted intrusion. We consent to and we invite sympathetic, constructive and informed effort to help improve our product, to purge it of actual impurity or offense. But we do not thereby concede the inquisitorial powers of any self-appointed or self anointed groups.

When in 1922 we set out deliberately to improve the social value of pictures, we had full faith in the ultimate public support, but we faced the fact that we could achieve exactly nothing by devoting our efforts solely to the creation of idealistic product; we knew that splendidly conceived and executed entertainment pictures, of a type for which no adequate support has been prepared in the public mind, would result in zero progress—that the pictures would be seen only by a few, and consequently only a few of them could be made.

We therefore established, and have persistently pursued, a double goal for the Public Relations and Public Information activities of the organized industry:

1. To make clear in the communities throughout the United States the responsibilities of local civic leadership in helping to raise the level of public taste which determines the quality of motion picture entertainment in each respective community.
2. To develop, expand and effectively maintain sympathetic cooperation between that leadership and the industry through facilities whereby intelligent public taste could quickly, constantly and accurately reach the studios.

Preceding this we set about, by trial and error, by experimentation and with anticipated frequency of mistakes, to build a product to meet the demand we were helping to create. This came first, because when you come right down to it, there is nothing which educates public taste so effectively and so rapidly as watching and listening to talking motion pictures which in every phase of their production are a little better than the public expects or demands. Every one of these courageous productions, frequently surprisingly ahead of its time, accomplishes at least this much—that thousands of those who see it acquire, unconsciously, new standards of taste.

This concurrent endeavor—one phase among ourselves at the studios, the other with and by the public—we have designated as:

a. Improving the quality of supply.
b. Improving the quality of demand.

The two operations are interdependent. Neither is dispensable. Together they have wrought progress and together they insure success. Our continuing task is to evolve real and wholesome entertainment that shall effectively supply amusement and relief to hundreds of millions. Under modern conditions this need is greater than ever before. Is it possible to satisfy this present need and yet ascendingly to key mass entertainment, to provide a satisfying diversion and recreation for the most exacting audience and to operate a profitable business?

Discouragements inevitably arise, repeated errors occur. Yet several thousand disinterested allies, actively at work among the public, and those of us who have furthered within the industry the aims adopted in 1922, know that the answer is "Yes."

You and those elements in the public that have joined with you are building in practical fashion a socially enlightened basis for Twenty-first Century entertainment.

Improving the Standard of Demand

Presently we shall examine our standards and the operation of the self-regulation established and maintained at the studios. That concerns improving the quality of supply.

Let us first examine briefly a case example of what is being done by community leadership toward improving the quality of demand.

Several years ago the industry conducted quietly a survey of twenty-five American cities to determine the proportion of motion picture entertainment, supported in each city, of the type most highly endorsed by public groups, by educators and by leadership within the industry.

At the bottom of the list of twenty-five ranked a certain city, which we will call Metropolis.

The only public group giving attention to motion pictures in Metropolis at that time was a self-constituted reform body, with a paid executive secretary, violently hostile and indiscriminately critical. This organization broke into print repeatedly, denounced with vehemence and staged public programs, inviting other professional reformers to ventilate their views. There was no liaison between civic leadership in Metropolis and the industry. Result: No education of taste, no progress. If trash found its way to the screen, it found its way to Metropolis.

Two years ago after conference with our office, some of the leading men and women in the civic life of Metropolis developed a really representative Motion Picture Council.

Today, in every neighborhood theatre in the vicinity of Metropolis there is a Motion Picture Council working in close cooperation with the neighborhood theatre manager. Family night programs at week-ends are uniformly in operation. One professional "reformer" has lost his job but Metropolis today rates very high among cities in the United States in its appreciation of quality product as evidenced by box office support. So satisfactory has been the result from the civic standpoint that there is now definite planning for the duplication of Metropolis' experience in a dozen additional major cities. In the smaller cities the formula has been increasingly in operation for several years.

Family Night Programs

Mr. M. A. Lightman, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who, in his theatres in Tennessee and Arkansas has carried out advanced methods of community cooperation, opened the Annual Convention of his Association, in Washington in March, 1932, with the following declaration of principle:

> "Psychologists agree that the family should find its recreation together, not separately. The wide variety of pictures now available, and their high quality, make it possible for week-end programs to be planned with the needs of the child in mind.
> "American parents everywhere should realize that the primary responsibility for wise thought and selection lies on them. The motion picture theatre owner can cooperate, but the entertainment needs of the child cannot be solved without intelligent action by parents.
> "'The door to the theatre manager's office is open,' we say, 'Come in and share in entertainment progress.'"

It has been the practice of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America to cooperate wholeheartedly with the exhibitors who adhere to this thesis of community cooperation, and to encourage such a viewpoint among exhibitors.

The result has been the successful establishment of cooperative efforts in approximately 3,000 neighborhoods between civic groups and theatre managers. This sound practice of inviting the public into consultative partnership spreads from day to day and comprises a considerable portion of the answer to the ever present dilemma of how to maintain adequate adult entertainment and at the same time give due weight and response to the entertainment needs of the child.

Preview Information

To have invited community leadership to share in improving the quality of demand and not to have

CITES AFFIRMATIVE EFFECT OF CODE

provided facilities to make that effort practicable, would have been a futile gesture.

It early became apparent that fathers and mothers, teachers, ministers and leaders of socially minded public groups must have some way of finding out in advance which specific forthcoming pictures would most merit their approval and support. For the industry to have attempted such discriminatory recommendation among its own product would have been presumption from the standpoint of the public and would have been internally impracticable for an Association representing more than a score of highly competitive producing companies.

We therefore instituted a system whereby we make the motion picture product available, to volunteer committees of responsible public groups, for preview purposes. The significant forward movement to improve the standard of demand for picture entertainment has in large part been made possible by the ability of local leadership to secure, from sources it implicitly could trust, advance appraisals of forthcoming pictures.

Volunteer, unbiased committees representing the following organizations now preview motion pictures in Hollywood and/or in the East:

American Library Association
Boy Scouts of America
California Congress of Parents and Teachers
Daughters of the American Revolution
Federated Church Brotherhoods of California (Stage and Screen Committee)
General Federation of Women's Clubs
International Federation of Catholic Alumnae
Los Angeles Branch, American Association of University Women
National Council of Jewish Women
National Society of New England Women
Young Men's Christian Association

The industry does not participate in the appointment of personnel on any of the previewing committees; it does not scrutinize the reports of the preview committee members. We take no part in the process, except arranging for showings, until the committee reports have gone into the respective headquarters of the various organizations and have been there approved and made public. Thereafter, when requested, the industry aids in the dissemination of the approved lists.

The organizations themselves, through their own contacts, and through their own local committees in many cities, have enthusiastically advanced the publication of these impartial and discriminating guides to motion picture entertainment.

The very limited clipping service to which the Association subscribes has recently given evidence of 312 newspapers which carry the endorsed lists of one or more of the public groups, and we know of 29 radio stations that broadcast these volunteer judgments.

All this means a special impetus behind the highest quality of product, enabling us to make and market an increasing proportion of pictures of which the social content is affirmative and constructive.

Public Support for Class Pictures

Throughout the nation many groups and many individuals have repeatedly expressed the desire for drama with serious themes. The Association is endeavoring to give these groups and individuals full opportunity to marshal interest in their communities for pictures on such themes as spiritual regeneration and for films that set salutary behavior patterns.

It is significant that The Man Who Played God did not meet with box-office expectations in its opening runs in New York and in Los Angeles, but that this fine picture is doing well in other communities throughout the United States. We believe the answer lies in the fact that there was time thoroughly to arouse public anticipation and appreciation of the picture in other cities through the enlistment of community forces to whose entertainment aspirations the picture is a direct response and challenge. It is probable that more than 1,000 sermons will be preached this Spring on the central theme of The Man Who Played God. It is certain that thousands who have the same desire that we have for the success of this type of picture are now giving word of mouth advertising to Mr. Arliss' splendid characterization.

The Association undertakes, in cooperation with any member company, direct communication, on behalf of pictures of high merit, with public-spirited groups and community leaders, and arranges suitable special previews.

Improving the Standard of Supply

Leadership among the public to improve the quality of demand has challenged the fullest discharge of our own obligation—the first essential element in the solution of our problem—carefully to develop the methods of translating into performance the will of the makers of motion pictures for better product.

The vast creative army in the studios from the four corners of the world, an army of artists—artists in writing, artists in directing, artists in acting, artists in illumination, artists in sound recording—are all intent on doing today something different and better than that done on yesterday. To say to the artist, "You must not do this," and "You must do that," is to indue either apathy or rebellion, destroying creation.

Added to this vigorous artistic integrity, which I respect and cherish, we have the further complexity, previously referred to, of the necessities of our business for speed and of the considerable entrustment of stockholders' money invested in each picture. Art and business must be welded.

Often in the past ten years it has been suggested with earnestness and sincerity that I assume more of, and exercise more dictatorially, that authority which you in generous confidence consistently have been willing to accord. Edict, pronunciamento, fiat, as a short cut to progress, is a fallacy that never dies, though never have the impulses motivating human behavior been directed higher or human aspirations accelerated by compulsion.

As education and the stimulated desire for better entertainment on the part of the public is the means of improving demand, so is education within our own ranks—genuine, convinced determination on the part of our own people to achieve a socially useful product—the method conducive to success in our half of the joint endeavor.

Affirmative Effect of Production Code

It was natural that when we first set out to safeguard the screen from the standpoint of wholesomeness, our concern should have been what not to do in pictures.

As part of this negative self-regulation you rejected in toto many financially successful pictures and plays because you held the basic themes to be unsuitable for presentation to the wider motion picture audience.

Under this head, too, would come the list of "Don'ts" adopted in 1927.

In the Production Code of the industry, adopted in April, 1930, and now the accepted standard in the studios of all our member companies, we retained the practice of stating certain things that we would not do. But very important, because reflecting a deeper understanding of our problems based on experience, were the affirmations in that document. It provided at the outset:

> That every effort shall be made to reflect in drama and entertainment the better standards of life.

In the statement indicating the reasoning behind various sections of the Code this affirmative policy was set forth:

> "Mankind generally has realized the difference in the entertainment which tends to improve the race, and the entertainment that tends to degrade. Crime, brutality, vice, are among the facts of life, but it is recognized that there is a right way and a wrong way to present such facts on the screen."

And again:

> "The love of man and woman, the social problems that emphasize the need of religious, ethical and moral teachings, are obviously proper plot material for motion picture presentation. Nevertheless, the screen which reflects the art of the multitudes, with its vast popular appeal, owes a definite responsibility to public morals to treat all sex relationships with due care and judgment."

The advance in thought here is obvious. The screen would be utterly valueless, socially and dramatically, if it did not maintain and exercise the right to treat the keyboard of human emotions and the full scene of customs and manners, past and present. The standards that we now seek to maintain emphasize the manner of treatment accorded the widening range of dramatic themes portrayed by the talking motion picture.

The Production Code has become, with gratifying unanimity, not only a self-regulatory guide to studio executives in the making of pictures, but a starting point for thought and discussion, in the case of every script, concerning those affirmative values evidenced in the types of developing drama that promise to constitute new factors and criteria in world entertainment.

The Code serves at four vital points in the production of a picture:

1. Consideration of the basic story before the first screen adaptation is written, and sometimes before purchase. In this early stage, the plot, considered in relation to the Code, may offer at once certain obvious points where care will be necessary or where, patently, social values will be impaired or preserved, depending on the manner of treatment.
2. Examination of the script. Here a blue print of the proposed picture is used in a second check with Code requirements. Danger points and opportunities for social usefulness now stand out in sharp relief.
3. The early stages of the actual making of a picture. Studio heads, supervisors, directors, etc., sit with the Association officers responsible for Code interpretation and evolve and weigh suggestions for the specific treatment of sequences that have been agreed upon as involving relation to the Code.
4. Examination of the finished picture to assure that the processes that have gone before have resulted in a product consonant with Code provisions.

The period of trial for these processes is past. They are operative in every studio. The following brief table compiled by Colonel Jason S. Joy, our representative in the actual work of Code interpretation, illustrates the thoroughness and fidelity with which the product of the screen is being exposed to the social illumination of the Code:

TABLE OF CODE OPERATIONS, 1931:

| | Features | Short Subjects | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. Total number of scripts, and synopsis read.......... | 527 | 260 | 787 |
| 2. Total number of Conferences on scripts, books, etc....... | 959 | 522 | 1,481 |
| 3. Total number of pictures reviewed .................... | 363 | 370 | 733 |
| 4. Total number of written opinions sent.............. | 446 | 381 | 827 |

During the past few months, a considerable number of new and responsible unaffiliated producers in Hollywood have expressed a desire to test their product, during the making, against the tenets of the Production Code. This comprises at once an endorsement and an opportunity for added service. Bearing in mind our continuous purpose of working on behalf of "all those engaged in the motion picture industry," we have made available to such non-member producers the same facilities for Code interpretation enjoyed by our membership.

Setting Styles in Motion Pictures

The increase in effectiveness of our conduits from public leadership and the corollary increase of interest among our studio personnel in satisfying the higher levels of entertainment demand has enabled us very early to sense shifts in public opinion and trends of taste, and we are equipped quickly to meet, indeed sometimes to lead, the more salutary of these trends.

At the last annual meeting in March, 1931, I suggested to this Board of Directors changes which were imminent in public attitude toward literary and dramatic offerings. I brought to you intimations we had received that the post-war period's preoccupation with sordid, bitter and sometimes semi-licentious themes was working in the public mind a natural and healthful reaction. Pursuant to your active interest in the proposed effort to occupy a position of leadership in this swing of the style pendulum, the Secretary of this Association spent considerable time during the months of April, May and June, 1931, in securing opinions from four classes of people:

1. Public Groups
2. Newspaper Editors
3. Distributing and Sales Factors
4. Theatre Managers, both affiliated and unaffiliated

Two questions were asked:

a. Of what types of motion pictures might well be less quantity?
b. Of what types of motion pictures should we have more during the coming season?

In June, 1931, the results of this inquiry were carried to the studios in California. All four of the groups consulted suggested fewer pictures with sex as the primary basis, fewer so-called "gangster pictures," and continued effort to avoid more completely the occasional vulgarities that creep into feature pictures and comedies.

On the other hand, those who were consulted asked for more pictures like Daddy Long Legs, Skippy, Cimarron, Shipmates, The Millionaire, Abraham Lincoln, The Connecticut Yankee, Seed, Father's Son, and Rango.

You will remember the redoubled care at the studios in the handling of sex subjects, and the conscious effort to avoid instances of bad taste. At that time, too, I took occasion to re-emphasize the suggestion made at the Annual Meeting on March 30, 1931, that with the growing indignation against gangster rule, public interest in such themes in literature, on the stage and in the films was waning. Our position then and our position now in that regard may be summarized as follows:

1. The proper treatment of crime as a social fact or as a dramatic motive is the inalienable right of a free press, of free speech, and of an unshackled stage or screen;
2. From the social standpoint, the insistent message "Crime does not pay," as flashed from the screen, is the most forceful proof of the success of self-regulation in the motion picture industry;
3. Insofar as the so-called "gangster" picture is concerned, the fact is undeniable that the screen has done much in recent months to "debunk" the gangster by removing his mask of mock-heroism and focusing public attention upon the grave dangers of his rule;
4. Nevertheless, a continued cycle of such themes, I suggested, was not in the interest of the widest possible entertainment program. To over-emphasize the gangster's role in American life was undesirable. Public taste, now emerging from the post-war dominance of realism in the raw demanded a more inspiring type of entertainment on the screen.

During the intervening year the trend of pictures has been away from sordidness and toward romance and clean comedy; and we have begun to supply an even more significant demand.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

IF those conducting the MPPDA's "preference poll" should send a questionnaire to Ignace Jan Paderewski, they would find that the former Polish premier, next to playing the piano, gets his greatest kick from the antics of slapstick comedians on the screen. He revealed as much while in Kansas City last week-end, when the Star in that city described the piano wizard's preference in films as follows:

"Paderewski has only one interest in America except his concerts. That is in what some persons call 'low comedy.' If Charlie Chaplin, Buster Keaton, Harold Lloyd or the four Marx brothers are capering on a convenient screen, Paderewski invites his business manager, L. J. Fitzgerald, to the theatre. Mr. Fitzgerald calls a taxi. Paderewski remains in the taxi while Mr. Fitgerald buys the tickets. Mr. Fitzgerald then nods his head and the great pianist glides furtively into the theatre, behind his manager, fearful of recognition.

"The pianist never has been recognized by a motion picture manager or audience. He sits far back in the house and chuckles and slaps his knees with long, talented hands as the custard pie is chucked and the low comedian sprawls.

A woman neighbor was suspected and when witnesses corroborated charges by the prosecution, her alibi was shattered until she suddenly produced a ticket stub as substantiation. Theatre records were brought into court, revealing that the defendant's ticket had been collected at about the time Levine was murdered. She was freed.

FOURTH DRAFT OF COPYRIGHT BILL FAILS TO SATISFY INDEPENDENTS

Allied Says Sirovich Measure as Rewritten Does Not Take Care of the Unaffiliated Exhibitor; Author Urges Action

Submission to the House of Representatives last week of a report on the new copyright bill has loosed upon the head of Representative William I. Sirovich, of New York, chairman of the patents committee, a storm of criticism from those industries affected.

The bill, it is declared, does not live up to Sirovich's all-inclusive promise to write a measure which would satisfy every industry interested. Failure to take care of the independent exhibitor, it is declared by Allied States, for instance, will mean a fight before the Senate committee to secure amendment when, if ever, the measure reaches the upper house.

Outlining the accomplishments of the bill in its report, the patents committee declares "the bill protects adequately all innocent infringers," which the 1909 copyright act failed to do. Dilating upon this point, the House report asserts:

"The present law, except in the case of certain infringements by motion picture producers, takes no account of innocence in the matter of infringements. The new bill takes account of innocence—for instance, innocent printers who act merely to print a work and who have no other interest in it are subject only to injunctions against future printing.

"Aside from these specific instances, all innocent infringers are treated alike under the provisions of the bill and are protected by provisions which limit the amount of recovery and the character of the remedy, according to the registration or non-registration of the work. Under the present copyright law, all profits are taken from an infringer, whether innocent or otherwise. As pointed out, we believe that the success of infringement suits has been hampered by the drastic provisions of this kind in the law.

"The bill," the report concludes "not only corrects the deficiencies and inadequacies of the present copyright law but provides a workable piece of legislation, easily understood and administered, which operates to do justice to all parties concerned."

During the hearings, Sirovich took pains to assure each industry whose representatives testified that a bill would be drawn which would suit their specific requirements. But that this was easier said than done was indicated by the fact that after the bill was introduced in the House early in March, a large number of protests were received. A second draft of the measure was then written and introduced and further hearings held, which resulted in the writing of a third draft. This, in turn, was followed by still another draft, and the committee's report was finally filed on April 5, still without having satisfied all interests.

The hearings on the bill were the most colorful of any in a long time, possibly since Representative Blanton's display during hearings on Sunday closing in the District of Columbia. Several sessions were enlivened by Sirovich's attacks upon newspaper critics and his harrowing recital of his experiences as a dramatist.

Independent exhibitors appearing before the committee during its hearings demanded that a hold-over be treated in the bill as a breach of contract rather than as an infringement. No such provision was made in the measure reported, but it is provided that in the case of the unauthorized exhibition of a motion picture, the infringer shall pay such statutory damages as the court may deem just but not less than $150 nor more than $10,000 for all infringements up to the date of suit. On the preceding page a detailed comparison is made between the old copyright law—the law in its present form—and that which is proposed in the measure now before Congress:

Objections of Allied States Association to Sirovich's bill were recorded by Abram Myers, chairman, in a letter sent last week to Sirovich. This week, Sirovich received an answer to Myers' objections from Gabriel L. Hess, representing the MPPDA. Generally, Hess took exception to the objections as voiced by Myers.

Early consideration of the new copyright bill was asked of the rules committee Tuesday by Representative Sirovich, chairman House Patents Committee. Dr. Sirovich pointed to the approaching end of the session and stressed the need and desire of affected industries for new legislation as promptly as possible. Copyright revision has been before the House for several years, he said, and there is a desire to have the matter settled.

Holdovers Said to Infringe Copyright

Unauthorized exhibition in the form of holdovers was held to be infringement of copyright, rather than breach of contract, in a unanimous opinion returned at Boston this week by the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit.

The opinion reverses the decrees entered last May by Judge Morton in dismissing the copyright infringement actions filed by Metro and Educational against the Bijou theatre at Boston for holding over pictures in excess of the number of days licensed. It sets forth that the opinion of U. S. District Judge Coleman handed down at Baltimore last May in the case of Tiffany vs. Dewing, was "well considered." It quotes Judge Coleman as saying, in disposing of the Maryland holdover case, "that the projection of a photoplay film on a screen without the copyright owner's permission was an infringement."

Judge Morris, for the Circuit Court of Appeals, held that "the copyright statutes ought to be reasonably construed with a view to effecting the purposes intended by Congress." The Appeals Court vacated the dismissal of the distributors' complaints by the lower court and returned the cases to that court with certain recommendations for amendment of the pleas.

Gabriel Hess, counsel for the distributors, said that the decision sustains the position of the distributors that the unauthorized exhibition of motion picture photoplays are infringements of copyright and that the federal courts have jurisdiction in cases of this character.

COMPROMISE CONSENT DECREE ENDS 3-YEAR CHICAGO ANTITRUST ACTION

21 Companies Agree to Being Enjoined from Illegal Practices Charged, While Not Admitting Any Violation

Litigation begun three years ago by the Department of Justice against Paramount Publix, its subsidiary, Balaban & Katz, and 19 other large distributors and exhibitors in Chicago, is over. It ended late last week in federal district court at Chicago with the filing of an amended petition and the signing of a final decree enjoining the defendant companies from engaging in the future in any of the illegal practices with which they were charged.

Conflicting interpretations of the effects of the settlement by the Department of Justice, Allied States Association and counsel for Paramount Publix point to a compromise arrived at between the Government and defendants, the principal advantage of which to the litigants, it appears, is a saving of expenditures of further litigation.

Enjoined from Any Illegal Practices

The closing of the case comes in the form of a consent decree by the terms of which the defendants do not admit guilt in any particular of the original or amended complaints, but agree to being enjoined forever from engaging in the illegal practices set forth in the decree, the proof of violation of any particular of which would stand them in contempt of court.

The decree is applicable only to the territory served by the Chicago exchanges and the action itself is based on evidence presented in the anti-trust suit brought in 1928 against Balaban & Katz, affiliated circuits and large distributors by Marks Brothers Theatres, Chicago independent exhibitors. Because this evidence was introduced in the complainant's efforts to prove a monopoly achieved by conspiracy in violation of the anti-trust laws, the present consent decree applies only to collusive, as distinguished from individual, acts. These collusive acts which the defendants are enjoined from engaging in have been defined as illegal in the Sherman anti-trust law, hence the decree contains no new definition of law pertaining to industry practices which would make it admissible as basic evidence in other cases.

Allied States, however, regards the decree as a "valuable precedent for other courts to follow," and says that "a copy of the decree should be included in every brief filed in behalf of independent exhibitors in cases involving protection, allocation of product, withholding of films, etc."

Complexion of Procedure Changed

The entire complexion of the Chicago exhibition and distribution plan, as it existed at the time of the filing of the original Marks Bros. complaint, was changed upon the later acquisition of the Marks Brothers' theatre properties by the principal defendant, Balaban & Katz. The significance of the decree to Chicago appears to be confined to a future eventuality similar to that which existed in the city at the time of the filing of the Marks Bros. complaint.

The Department of Justice interprets the decree as a "victory for the Government," establishing its contention on the claim that the final decree "adjudges the entire conspiracy to have been illegal and in violation of the Sherman Act and enjoins all of the defendant companies from further carrying out the conspiracy or any similar conspiracy by any means whatsoever. Further, the decree specifically enjoins the defendants from further engaging in any of the illegal practices with which they had been charged in the amended petition.

Bars Unreasonable Protection

"One of the broadest provisions of the decree enjoins the defendants from granting to theatres affiliated with them in the Chicago territory, any arbitrary or unreasonable protection or clearance over competing, unaffiliated theatres. The decree not only assures the smaller, unaffiliated theatre owners and the public of substantially all the relief sought on their behalf by the attorney general, but gives them this relief immediately without the delays and expenses which would be incident to prolonged litigation."

However, the acts which the defendants are enjoined from committing are those which are perpetrated in collusion and have already been defined as illegal in the Sherman antitrust laws. Further, the provision enjoining the defendants from enforcing any uniform plan of "arbitrary or unreasonable protection or clearance" loses some of its significance in view of the fact that the distributors, through the Hays Office, announced last fall that they would not participate further in zoning and protection conferences until pending cases attacking the legality of the practice had been settled. Moreover, there is no general significance to the enjoinder as the term "unreasonable protection" is one which lacks specific definition and varies in each zone, it is pointed out.

As to Block Booking

Counsel for the defendants maintains that the decree upholds the block booking practice, but this contention, too, loses much of its significance by virtue of the fact that this also relates only to individual company policy, and does not apply to block booking when entered upon, as was charged in the original complaint, by distributors acting together and in concert. The legality of block booking as an individual company sales policy was upheld earlier by the U. S. circuit court of appeals at New York.

The amended petition filed last week not only contains all the charges relating to conspiracy to violate the antitrust laws, which were made in the original petition, but also alleges that the defendants have further discriminated against unaffiliated theatre owners by purchasing pictures in excess of normal business requirements, "thus engrossing the supply"; by insisting upon and obtaining exclusive first-run rights; by block booking and by tying-in of shorts and features in deals with independents "without making the same requirements of theatres affiliated with them."

Decree Pertains Only to Chicago Territory; Conditions Changed Since Marks Bros. Launched Original Action

Defendants named in the petition in addition to Paramount Publix and Balaban & Katz are: Lubliner & Trinz Theatres, Inc.; B. & K. Midwest Theatres,Inc.; Great States Theatres, Inc.; Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Universal, United Artists, Fox, Warner Bros.-F. N., Vitagraph, Columbia, Educational, Pathe, F. B. O., Gotham Photoplays Corp., and Publix-Great States Theatres.

Impressive Legal Talent

One of the most impressive arrays of legal talent ever assembled in defense of larger distributors and exhibitors was represented in this antitrust case. The decree was signed by the following attorneys:

Cravath, deGersdorff, Swaine & Wood, one of the most prominent New York law firms; Coudert Brothers, also prominent in New York; Frederick Coudert was a recent candidate for attorney general of the state; Burry, Johnstone, Peters & Dixon; Winston, Strawn & Shaw, probably the outstanding Chicago law firm, headed by Silas Strawn, a director of several of the city's larger banks, former chairman of the board of Montgomery Ward & Co., president of the Chicago Better Government Association, and leader of the many commissions for the financial relief of the city in its financial crises; R. The complete text of the consent decree follows:

United States of America filed its amended and supplemental petition herein, and each of the defendants having duly appeared by their respective counsel, the United States of America by George E. Q. Johnson, United States Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois and John Harlan Amen, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, moved the Court for an injunction as prayed in the petition and each of the defendants consented to the entry of this decree without contest and before any testimony had been taken.

WHEREFORE, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

I. The term "affiliated exhibitors" as used herein shall include persons, firms, partnerships or corporations which are engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures at theatres which are owned, operated or controlled, directly or indirectly, by any producer or distributor of motion pictures.

II. The term "unaffiliated exhibitors" as used herein shall include persons, firms, partnerships or corporations which are engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures at theatres which are not owned, operated or controlled, directly or indirectly, by any producer or distributor of motion pictures.

III. The Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and of all persons and parties hereto and the amended and supplemental petition herein states a cause of action against the defendants under the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act.

IV. The words "concertedly," "concerted," "collusive," "collusively," "collective," "collectively" and "concert or agreement" as used in this decree shall include any mutual agreement, understanding, plan, device or contrivance between any two or more defendants but shall not include merely simultaneously and/or similar action if shown to have been independently taken on the part of two or more defendants.

V. The conspiracy to restrain and to monopolize interstate trade and commerce in motion picture films described in the amended and supplemental petition herein is hereby declared illegal and in violation of said act of Congress of July 2, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act.

VI. The defendants and each of them, their respective officers, directors, agents, servants, employees and all persons acting or claiming to act on behalf of them or any of them be, and they hereby are, perpetually enjoined and restrained from carrying out, directly or indirectly, expressly or impliedly, by any means whatsoever, the conspiracy described in the amended and supplemental petition herein and from entering into or carrying out, directly or indirectly, expressly or impliedly, any similar conspiracy of like character or effect in the Chicago exchange territory.

VII. The defendants and any two or more of them, when acting as distributors of motion pictures in the Chicago exchange territory in such instances, or the defendants and any two or more of them, when acting as exhibitors of motion pictures in the Chicago exchange territory in such instance, or the defendants and any two or more of them, when one or more is acting both as a distributor and an exhibitor in the Chicago exchange territory in such instance, their respective officers, agents, servants, employees and all persons acting or claiming to act on behalf of them or any of them, be enjoined from collusively, collectively or by concert or agreement:

(a) Restricting the course of interstate trade and commerce in motion picture films distributed by defendant distributors for first run exhibitions in the territory served by the Chicago Exchanges and for first and second suburban run exhibitions in the City of Chicago, Illinois, to motion picture theatres managed or booked by any one or more of defendant exhibitors.

(b) Preventing unaffiliated exhibitors of motion pictures in the Chicago Exchange Territory from contracting for or from securing in the course of interstate trade and commerce any motion picture film or films suitable for first run exhibition or first or secord suburban run exhibition in any city or town in the territory served by the Chicago Exchanges in which any one of the defendant exhibitors operates or books one or more motion picture theatres.

(c) Restraining unaffiliated exhibitors in the Chicago Exchange Territory from contracting, in the course of interstate trade and commerce, for any motion picture or pictures to exhibit and from securing any positive print of any motion picture so contracted for, until such time after the release and prior exhibition of each said motion picture in any theatre operated or booked by any one of defendant exhibitors in said territory that the exhibition value thereof has been lost.

(d) Restraining unaffiliated exhibitors in the Chicago Exchange Territory, which exhibitors do not compete with any motion picture theatre or theatres operated or booked by any one of defendant exhibitors, from contracting in the course of interstate trade and commerce for any motion picture to exhibit first run prior to or at the same time as any first run exhibition of the same motion picture in any motion picture theatre operated or booked by any one of defendant exhibitors, and not in competition with said unaffiliated exhibitor or exhibitors.

(e) Excluding distributors of motion picture films other than defendant distributors from contracting, in the course of interstate trade and commerce to license first run exhibitions of the feature motion pictures distributed by them in first class, first run motion picture theatres in the City of Chicago, Illinois, and in other cities and towns in the Chicago Exchange Territory.

(f) Acquiring the management or booking control, without a substantial proprietary interest therein, of substantially all first class, first run motion picture theatres in the City of Chicago, Illinois; acquiring the management or booking control, without a substantial proprietary interest therein, of substantially all first class, first run motion picture theatres in all the principal cities and towns throughout the Chicago Exchange Territory, or acquiring the management or booking control, without a substantial proprietary interest therein, of substantially all first class, first and second suburban run motion picture theatres in the City of Chicago, Illinois.

(g) Granting to motion picture theatres, owned, operated or controlled by defendant exhibitors in the territory served by the Chicago Exchanges, arbitrary or unreasonable protection or clearances over competing theatres owned, operated or controlled by unaffiliated exhibitors.

VIII. The defendant exhibitors and any two or more of them, their respective officers, directors, agents, servants, employees and all persons acting or claiming to act on behalf of them or any of them be enjoined from coercing or compelling or attempting to coerce or compel defendant distributors, their officers, agents or employees with the intent, for the purpose and with the effect of accomplishing the performance of any of the acts enjoined in the foregoing paragraph VII hereof.

IX. The defendants and any two or more of them, when acting as distributors of motion pictures in the Chicago exchange territory in such instance, or the defendants and any two or more of them, when acting as exhibitors of motion pictures in the Chicago exchange territory in such instance, or the defendants and any two or more of them, when one or more is acting both as a distributor and an exhibotor in the Chicago exchange tekrritory in such instance, their respective officers, agents, servants, employees and all persons acting or claiming to act on behalf of them or any of them, be enjoined from preparing, publishing, adopting, enforcing or attempting to enforce any uniform plan, system or schedule of zoning or clearance with the intent, for the purpose or with the effect of accomplishing the performance of any of the acts enjoined in the foregoing paragraph VII hereof.

X. The defendant exhibitors and each of them, and each and all of their respective officers, agents, servants, employees and all other persons, acting or claiming to act on behalf of them or any of them be, and they hereby are, perpetually enjoined and restrained from entering into or performing any contracts, agreements, franchises or licenses with any one or more of the defendant distributors for the exhibition of motion pictures in the territory served by the Chicago exchanges, the individual or collective effect of which will unreasonably lessen competition in interstate trade and commerce between the defendants or any two or more of them, or effect a combination in unreasonable restraint of interstate trade and commerce in motion pictures or create a monopoly of interstate trade and commerce in motion pictures in said territory.

XI. The defendants and any two or more of them, when acting as distributors of motion pictures in the Chicago exchange territory in such instance, of the defendants and any two or more of them, when acting as exhibitors of motion pictures in the Chicago exchange territory in such instance, or the defendants and any two or more of them, when one or more is acting both as a distributor and an exhibitor in the Chicago exchange territory in such instance, their respective officers, agents, servants, employees and all persons acting or claiming to act on behalf of them or any of them, be and they hereby are perpetually enjoined and restrained from collusively, collectively or by concert or agreement between them, formulating, adopting or practising a policy either generally or with respect to particular communities:

(a) Whereby the supply of motion pictures distributed by defendant distributors is engrossed for exhibition in theatres owned, operated or controlled by defendant exhibitors in the territory served by the Chicago Exchanges; that is to say, whereby more motion pictures are bought for exhibition by said defendant exhibitors than is reasonably necessary for the proper conduct of their respective businesses in said territory for the purpose or with the intent of preventing competing unaffiliated exhibitors therein from obtaining said motion pictures.

(b) Whereby defendant exhibitors obtain the exclusive first choice of motion pictures distributed by defendant distributors in the territory served by the Chicago Exchanges; that is to say, whereby said defendant exhibitors are permitted to contract for the exhibition of such motion pictures distributed by defendant distributors as they may deem most profitable before the same have been offered to unaffiliated exhibitors in said territory for the purpose or with the intent of preventing said unaffiliated exhibitors from obtaining said motion pictures.

(c) Whereby motion pictures distributed by defendant distributors are leased to unaffiliated exhibitors in said Chicago Exchange Territory only in groups containing a fixed minimum number of such pictures for the purpose or with the effect of restraining competing unaffiliated exhibitors in said territory from leasing such individual motion pictures as they may require and of compellng said unaffiliated exhibitors to contract for the exhibition of more motion pictures distributed by defendant distributors than are needed for the legitimate conduct of their respective businesses.

(d) Whereby defendant distributors leasing feature pictures, news reels and short subjects make it a condition of sale to unaffiliated exhibitors in said Chicago Exchange Territory, that the latter purchase the news reels and/or short subjects, as a condition precedent to obtaining the feature pictures and do not make the same condition of sale to defendant exhibitors, for the purpose or with the intent of restraining competing unaffiliated exhibitors in said territory from leasing such individual motion pictures as they may require and of compelling said competing unaffiliated exhibitors to contract for the exhibition of more motion pictures distributed by defendant distributors than are needed for the legitimate conduct of their respective businesses.

XII. Nothing in this decree contained shall be construed so as to prevent the defendant distributors, acting separately, from entering into and/or carrying out contracts with the defendant exhibitors, acting separately, or to prevent the defendant exhibitors, acting separately, from entering into and/or carrying out contracts with the defendant distributors, acting separately, for motion picture films to be exhibited at theatres maintained and operated by defendant exhibitors; or at theatres for which, the defendant exhibitors contract for motion picture films; or to prevent defendant exhibitors, acting separately, from selecting for exhibition a certain number of motion picture films from the annual product of such distributors, or any of them, before said distributors enter into negotiations or contracts with unaffiliated exhibitors for; or permit unaffiliated exhibitors to select, motion picture films, from time to time, for exhibiton purposes; or to prevent defendant exhibitors, acting separately, from entering into contracts for or making selections of motion picture films for exhibition purposes before the time when unaffiliated exhibitors, or any of them, have entered into such contracts or made such selections.

XIII. Nothing in this decree contained shall be construed to declare a classsification of theatres according to the method described in the amended petition as first, second and third or subsequent run or runs theatres, or such other reasonable classification as may hereafter from time to time be in use in the motion picture industry, or zoning of such theatres for clearance and/or protection of motion picture films for exhibition purposes as between theatres, including clearance and/or protection according to runs or price of admission, to be illegal as such or in violation of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce," commonly known as the Sherman Antitrust Act, or as prohibiting any defendant from selecting its own customers and bargaining with them in accordance with law, or as prohibiting defendant distributors and defendant exhibitors from bargaining separately with each other in accordance with law, or any affiliated exhibitor from exhibiting at any time its own films in theatres owned or controlled by it.

XIV. Nothing in this decree contained shall be construed as prohibiting any otherwise lawful conduct by any one or more defendants, anything in this decree to the contrary notwithstanding.

XV. For the purposes of this decree, in case any defendant owns the controlling interest in any other defendant or defendants, either directly or indirectly, such defendants (so long as such relationship continues), and/or the respective subsidiaries of any defendant herein, shall be deemed one defendant.

XVI. Jurisdiction of this cause be and it hereby is retained for the purpose of enforcing and modifyng this decree.

XVII. The Petitioner have and recover from the defendants its costs herein.

Sax, Mack of Vitaphone Plant To Do Musical Color Shorts

Sam Sax, head of the Brooklyn Vitaphone studio of Warner, and Roy Mack, director, leave New York for the Warner Coast plant this week, where they will produce a series of two-reel Technicolor musical shorts.

The group will be released during the 1932-33 season. Sax and Mack will remain on the Coast for a few weeks, pending the completion of alterations at the Brooklyn plant. Mack has directed all musical shorts at the New York studio during the past two years.

Sam Sax said: "There is no truth in the yarn buzzing around Broadway that Vitaphone is letting out any of its staff or closing the Brooklyn Studios. No one is being fired. I am going to Hollywood to make some shorts in color. While I am away some physical alterations will be made in the Brooklyn Studios but no others. Everyone down to the doorman will stay right on the job. I shall be away about a month."

SENATE COMMITTEE GET EXEMPTION PLEA

Pettijohn Request for Increase of Exemption from Admission Levy to 50 Cents Is Presented to Finance Group

By F. L. BURT, Washington

The motion picture industry on Wednesday afternoon began its fight to raise the admission tax exemption above the 45 cents provided in the House tax bill. Charles C. Pettijohn, representing the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, appealed to the finance committee of the Senate, headed by Senator James Watson of Indiana, to raise the exemption to include 50 cent admissions.

Treasury representatives argued that a 10 cent tax on admissions above 50 cents, as requested, would reduce the $40,000,000 revenue expected from a 45 cent exemption level to $33,000,000. Pettijohn disagreed with the Government spokesmen, declaring that instead of the $7,000,000 claimed, the loss would not exceed $3,000,000.

Sharp attack upon the revenue bill passed by the House of Representatives on April 1 as serving only further to depress business marked the opening of hearings on the measure last week by the Senate finance committee.

Appearing before the committee to present the views of the Administration on the bill, Secretary of the Treasury Ogden L. Mills attacked the proposed corporation income rates of 13½ and 15 per cent, the discontinuance of the exemption of dividends from normal income tax, the repeal of the net loss provisions and the high rates on stock transfers and estates.

The lowering of the admission tax exemption to 10 cents and the other recommendations made by the Treasury when tax legislation was suggested to Congress by the President last December were again proposed as a means of raising the revenue which would be required if the objections to the House bill were acted upon by the finance committee.

Fears Retarding of Recovery

"The cumulative effect of all these provisions is very great," Secretary Mills told the committee in expressing his opposition to the bill. "They tend to converge the full weight of each of them upon capital actively employed in business, and to discourage the normal flow of capital into industry and commerce at a time when business men are hesitant and industry stagnant. Their combined restrictive effect, magnified by the deadening influence of the depression, will in my judgment tend to retard business recovery.

"What we want to accomplish above all else at the present time," he declared, "is to break down the vicious circle of deflation of credit, industrial stagnation, falling prices and loss of purchasing power."

The only merit in the bill passed by the House, it was intimated by the secretary, is that it raises $1,032,000,000 of new revenue and that, "from the standpoint of the Treasury, is a most vital consideration." The bill recommended by the ways and means committee, carrying the general manufacturers' sales tax, he indicated, was acceptable to the Administration.

The Treasury proposals, Mills pointed out, would raise $1,241,000,000, the amount needed to balance the budget; the bill recommended by the ways and means committee would have raised $1,246,000,000, which would have given a surplus of $5,000,000, but the measure passed by the House will fall $209,000,000 short of balancing the budget.

The Treasury recommendation for taxes on all admissions in excess of 10 cents, he pointed out further, would have raised $110,000,000, while the 24-cent exemption in the committee bill reduced that sum to $90,000,000, and the 45-cent exemption in the measure finally adopted by the House will bring only $40,000,000. He did not, however, discuss the admission tax in detail.

Taylor in New York; May Go Abroad

P. C. Taylor, who resigned last week as Canadian general manager for RKO-Radio Pictures, has been in New York this week in conference with executives of one of the big companies. He made no announcement of his plans, but it is reported that he may go abroad.

Taylor is one of the oldest distributors in Canada in point of years of service. He opened up distribution in Canada eight years ago for the old FBO company, operating a direct sales organization for physical distribution through Educational. Five years ago Taylor organized a complete exchange system for the company throughout the Dominion.

Kent, Lightman, Nagel Will Address Academy on Coast

Sidney R. Kent, M. A. Lightman and Conrad Nagel will be the principal speakers at the first of three general meetings for all members of the Academy of Arts and Sciences on the Coast, April 27. Irving Thalberg will be chairman of the meeting, to be followed by two others during the year.

The gathering is for the purpose of familiarizing those engaged in production in Hollywood with conditions prevailing in other branches of the industry over the country. Kent will discuss distribution, Lightman theatre operation, and Nagel will talk on public taste and the popular attitude toward the screen, as gleaned from his recent national tour on behalf of the Academy.

Schayer Remains at Universal

Richard Schayer will remain as scenario editor at Universal on the Coast for the next 12 months, the company having exercised its option on his services.

$181,557 Quarter Net for Universal

Universal Pictures Company, Inc., and subsidiaries, report a net profit, after all charges, of $181,557 for the three months ended January 30, 1932, the first quarter.

For the same quarter of 1931 the profit was $1,045,326, which, however, as the company pointed out at the time, was abnormal due to the change in the method of amortizing positive and negative costs to conform to the general practice in the industry of writing off these costs over the income producing life of pictures. Had the inventories of the released film at the beginning of the first quarter of 1931 been valued on the same basis as were the released inventories at the beginning and end of the first quarter of 1932, then the profit for that first quarter of 1931 would have been $90,432, which is comparable to the profit of $181,557.11 reported above, according to the company.

Current assets as at January 30, 1932, were $8,629,891.41 and current liabilities, $2,011,386.90.

New Canadian Tax Into Effect May 2

E. A. Dunlop, provincial treasurer of Ontario, at Toronto, has announced the schedule of admission taxes to go into effect in the province on May 2. One important exemption stipulation is to the effect that the tax must be paid to the government for charity or patriotic entertainments with application for a refund after it is shown that 66 2/3 per cent of the gross receipts are devoted to the purpose advertised.

The only straight exemptions are on tickets up to 25 cents, on admissions to agricultural fairs and on church concerts where no person receives remuneration or expenses and the total proceeds are for church work. The tax must be paid on admissions to grand stand performances or side shows within the grounds of agricultural fairs.

The new tax schedule is as follows: all tickets up to and including 25 cents, exempt; over 25 cents and not more than 33 cents, two cents; over 33 cents and not more than 37 cents, three cents; over 37 cents and not more than 46 cents, four cents; over 46 cents and not more than 55 cents, five cents; over 55 cents and not more than 64 cents, six cents; over 64 cents and not more than 73 cents, seven cents; over 73 cents and not more than 82 cents, eight cents.

The scale continues until the maximum of 50 cents in tax is reached on tickets over $4.

GRAND HOTEL

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

With a galaxy of stars that just have made the Milky Way sit up and keel over, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of "Grand Hotel" hit one of the high-water marks in dramatic screen plays.

As drama, as comedy, as character portrayal I rank "Grand Hotel" with the few firstclass entertainments on stage or screen. So perfect, so vivid, so well done is this picture that I was not picture-conscious at all. It created an illusion of absolute reality.

It is true that in all screen representations of famous plays, such as this one, there is a certain color and flavor missing that only real human beings have and for which there will never be found a substitute, just as no phonograph record, however perfect, of Paderewski can ever take the place of seeing and hearing the man himself.

But even within these limitations of the screen I got a far greater kick out of the picture version of Vicki Baum's show than I did out of the play itself.

Edmund Goulding, the director, has followed the play in almost every detail. There is a gruesome hearse scene which he added and which should be eliminated. In the play the lonely Doctor Otternschlag (played superbly by Lewis Stone) has a patch over one eye. In the picture Mr. Goulding has disfigured the whole side of Mr. Stone's face with acid burns. This was not necessary. But they are the only two blemishes in this picture that never has a dull moment, that whirls you from scene to scene with breathless pictures of tense dramatic quality or gorgeous humor, and that rises like a symphonic suite to a sardonic, a gay anti-climax.

The acting registers 100 per cent. The memorable portrayals go to Greta Garbo, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery and Lewis Stone. John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Jean Hersholt, Ferdinand Gottchalk and Tully Marshall were perfect in their parts, but it is the first four that will brand themselves into your memory. Their acting fairly walked out of the screen.

Garbo as Grusinkaya, the dancer who is about to commit suicide because her public has gone back on her and who resolves to live when the Baron, a hotel burglar, makes desperate love to her, has never done better work. Her change from despondency to whimsical light-heartedness was an amazing piece of virtuosity. The close-ups depicted every vibration, grave and gay, in her soul. She is a great actress—and I never thought so before!

Lionel Barrymore as Otto Kringelein, the ailing provincial who comes to the Grand Hotel in Berlin with a few thousand marks to have a great time before he dies, was simply overwhelming. No such character acting has been seen on stage or screen in my memory. Whether drunk, cringing, threatening or love-making, Barrymore moved this Kringelein into the gallery of unforgettable creations.

Wallace Beery as Preysing, the Big Floor Map Man who is arrested for killing the Baron while the Baron is robbing his room and while he, Preysing, is about to have a session with his stenographer, ran all the gamuts of brutality, clumsy love-making, small-town hypocrisy and remorse.

John Barrymore was a suave burglar-lover and Joan Crawford put all her wiles into the stenographer who is out on the make and who at last goes off to Paris with the dying, half-drunk Kringelein.

The solidity of "Grand Hotel" not only lies in its vivid character-creations and dramatic web that is so cleverly woven around these persons unknown to one another in the Grand Hotel and who are destined to affect one another's lives, but there is an allegorical background to the whole story. Grand Hotel is the world we live in. These people are you and I.

This is a great adult picture. It once more announces that the Screen is rapidly coming of age. It ought to pack 'em in till the saloons reopen.

THE MISLEADING LADY

SEVERAL good selling slants enhance what otherwise could be classified as a very ordinary picture. So, since this one provides us with some merchandising angles it's O. K. We'll leave the critical opinions regarding story, cast and direction to others.

Title is "misleading" so far as its direct bearing on the picture is concerned and should therefore be backed with an intelligent campaign if it is going to mean money for b. o. Run the better names in the cast above the title and then use some good catchlines to sell away from the idea that this picture has anything to do with the stage, especially in the smaller towns and cities where the title may immediately leave such an impression. Gag lines referring to Erwin and the "nut" role he plays as Napoleon, and comedy slants ought to be pushed to the fore as they certainly do more for this picture than the dramatic spots.

Claudette Colbert, Edmund Lowe and Stuart Erwin are the only names which can mean anything on your marquee or in your advertising. But they ought to be strong enough to create interest and bring them to the theatre.

"Audience value" is satisfactory to the extent it will provide an evening's entertainment. Where the story is weak the numerous highlights of the picture save it and manage to sustain the necessary interest and suspense (if we are not getting too flattering). We can visualize this picture and a good supporting bill of shorts as a highly satisfying program for any theatre.

Read over the informative review in the HERALD for an idea of the plot and synopsis of the picture. It ought to provide you with enough of an idea to go to work on your preliminary campaign.

There's nothing really objectionable for kids or Sundays other than the fact that he abducts the heroine. If your community can find anything terrible in that then spot it midweek. But wherever you do play it, try the the sort of campaign that brings out the customers who can be attracted through smart showselling and who stay away from the ordinary stuff.

SCANDAL FOR SALE

Universal 73 minutes

IF your patrons like sensational stuff, newspaper yarns and all the hokum that goes into the making of such pictures, then here's a box office natural for you. Universal has crowded more territory and action in this one picture than you can generally expect from three or four.

The title is chock full of b. o. magnetism providing you build up a strong campaign and again providing that your customers are not fed up with newspaper stuff. If they can stand it and you can sell it, then everything is going to be all right.

To augment that title you have your choice of these names: Pat O'Brien, of "Front Page" fame; Rose Hobart and Charlie Bickford. Not so strong, but we've seen them weaker, too.

Better read up well on the informative review to get a direct slant on the plot of this picture. It ought to show you the way to head in your campaign. Select the angles which ought to appeal to your particular patronage and play them up for all they are worth.

"Audience value" is questionable according to the type of people who come to your house. The more refined and sophisticated may turn up their noses just a wee bit. If they, by chance, love their rough stuff and he-man characterizations, then give 'em a large order of Bickford. It should get by better than average in most spots, and it will if you try some sensational advertising right along the lines of the picture itself.

It's not suitable for kids or Sunday showings in the smaller cities. It will get you more in the middle of the week and requires a good assortment of short subjects to round out a suitable show.

CHARLES E. LEWIS.

The Misleading Lady

(Paramount)

Comedy-Drama

Claudette Colbert, this time with Edmund Lowe opposite, plays the central role in what might have been titled "The Taming of the Feminine." There are lightsome moments, for the most part supplied by Stuart Erwin of the un-prepossessing countenance. The principal theme itself, however, was conducive of numerous laughs at the New York Paramount, where a capacity crowd gave rather general evidence of enjoyment.

Miss Colbert, wealthy, bored and dissatisfied with a round of bridges, luncheons, and the like, attempts to obtain the leading role in a play to be produced by Robert Strange. He is unconvinced, and she stakes the job on her ability to make Edmund Lowe, returned South American mining engineer, fall violently in love with her at a house party. She succeeds, but the secret is unfortunately brought humiliatingly home to Lowe by accident.

He immediately goes into action, via the caveman route, beginning by kidnaping Miss Colbert and taking her to his mountain cabin. She puts up a game fight and is finally chained to the wall by Lowe. The scenes within the cabin are sufficiently amusing to have evoked laughter from the audience. Stuart Erwin appears quietly on the scene as a harmless and mild lunatic who firmly believes he is Napoleon. Lowe, attempting to quiet the insane Erwin, indulges in a bit of horseplay which was fairly appreciatively received. George Meeker, Miss Colbert's fiance, trails them to the cabin, revolver in hand, is disarmed by Lowe. The keepers come for Napoleon, and when a gun goes off, Miss Colbert, now thoroughly tamed, of course, jumps into Lowe's arms instead of those of her erstwhile intended husband.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Stuart Walker. From the play by Charles Goddard and Paul Dickey. Screen play by Adelaide Heilbron and Caroline Francke. Cameraman, George Folsey. Release date, April 15, 1932. Running time, 70 minutes.

Disorderly Conduct

(Fox)

Drama

Once again the police force of the large city triumphs in its unending war against gangs, dives and general corruption. This particular triumph of law and order derives its major significance from the personal vindication of a police captain, Ralph Bellamy, and the regained self-respect of Officer Spencer Tracy, whose straightforward outlook had been sadly damaged by wealthy and reckless Sally Eilers.

A New York Roxy audience gave every evidence of deriving much in the way of entertainment from the fast-paced film, replete with fast-driven motorcycles and motor cars, of police raids and station house horseplay, with a bit of well-aimed pistol fire to add the spice to the police story.

Motorcycle Officer Tracy arrests Sally Eilers, daughter of wealthy and influential Ralph Morgan, whose income is in part derived from crooked sources, after she laughs at him and leads him a merry chase. He realizes his error when the wheels begin turning and he finds himself demoted to a street walking patrolman's post under Ralph Bellamy, known for his honesty as a police captain. Soured on the world and the importance of being "on the square," Tracy makes a fool of his captain, who happens to be in love with Miss Eilers, and earns a bit of extra money by tipping off Frank Conroy, owner of a gambling house, when Bellamy plans a raid.

The truth comes out and Bellamy confronts Tracy with his guilt, promising to "break" him out of the department. Bellamy stages a raid on Conroy's dive and forces Tracy to lead the charge. Tracy's family consists of his mother, two nieces and a nephew, the most appealing youngster, little Dickie Moore. While the raid is in progress, Tracy finds Miss Eilers in a room with a dead crook and takes money from Morgan to keep his mouth closed. Conroy, released, trails Tracy with a machine gun, which Tracy escapes, but at the cost of Dickie's life. The death transforms Tracy, who, after dispatching Conroy, returns to the station, turns the money over to Bellamy, and collapses.

Squared, Tracy returns to his motorcycle post, again pursues speeding Miss Eilers, and a budding romance is left to the imagination of the audience. Amusing comedy is supplied by El Brendel in the station house as a fellow-officer of Tracy, whose work throughout was very well received.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by John W. Considine, Jr. Story by William Anthony McGuire. Photographed by Ray June. Sound, W. W. Lindsay. Art director, Duncan Cramer. Costumes, Guy S. Duty. Release date, March 20, 1932. Running time, 82 minutes.

Scandal for Sale

(Universal)

Newspaper Drama

The arrow wings its way around the newspaper cycle of film dramas, and Universal makes its contribution in the form of "Scandal for Sale," wherein Charles Bickford, two-fisted and strong-voiced, offers the managing editor, who comes very close to wrecking his own and the life of his family, but recovers in time, though at considerable expense.

Bickford, happy with home, wife and two appealing youngsters, becomes dissatisfied with his Boston managing editorship, since J. Farrell MacDonald, chief, refuses to subscribe to Bickford's editorial slant, sensationalism. Disgusted, ambitious, Bickford becomes managing editor of a New York tabloid, with his assistant Pat O'Brien, friend who follows him down from Boston. Berton Churchill plays the rather lurid-minded publisher, who is sold on the idea of large circulation by Bickford.

The latter goes to work, raking up scandal, splashing mud all over the place, while the circulation manager goes into ecstasies. The net result is neglect of Rose Hobart, his wife, and the children to the point where the small son dies because Bickford was too busy to get a doctor in time. The climax comes, however, when Bickford promotes a trans-Atlantic flight piloted by a German, Hans von Twardowski, and O'Brien is assigned as reporter by radio on the voyage.

In mid-ocean, the plane runs into an electrical storm and O'Brien, though drunk, sends in his last story, before the plane plunges into the heavy sea. The photographic work and the performances of O'Brien and von Twardoski in the plane in the moments before the plunge were generally considered to be splendid bits.

The death of O'Brien is the last straw. Miss Hobart prepares to leave Bickford for a return to Boston. But Bickford has had his lesson in the art and technique of muck-raking. Quitting, he suggests that Miss Hobart use a bonus from Churchill to buy a newspaper of ancient vintage in Dayton, Ohio, and hire her husband as managing editor. Miss Hobart decides that she will.

Producd and distributed by Universal. Directed by Russel Mack. From original story by Emil Gauvereau. Adaptation and dialogue by Ralph Graves. Editor, Robert Carlisle. Continuity by Robert Keith. Cameraman, Karl Freund. Sound, C. Roy Hunter. Release date, April 17, 1932. Running time, 75 minutes.

It's Tough to be Famous

(First National)

Comedy-Drama

The trials and tribulations of the sudden national hero are recorded in satiric vein, with able and personable Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., as the national hero. There is just the slightest suspicion apparent that perhaps one Charles Augustus Lindbergh of popular memory, in his spectacular rise to heroism, and his inherent distaste for its attendant manifestations, might have been the reason for it all, its inspiration.

There is some little in the nature of comedy in the film, by reason of the most complete manner in which Fairbanks is hounded, first out of freedom of thought and action, later out of a wife, but, fortunately, only temporarily.

Fairbanks, at the opening of the film, is the youthful commander of a rammed submarine. He sends his men through a torpedo tube to safety, one by one, is himself rescued by divers, and thereby becomes a national hero. Follow various and sundry newsreel shots reminiscent of numerous New York receptions to numerous returned heroes, with much of the usual fanfare and trumpets. Walter Catlett, unbidden, undertakes to act as Fairbanks' manager, and leads him a merry chase, through dinners and luncheons, parties and speeches, invading his privacy as far as is humanly possible.

Mary Brian, small-town sweetheart of Fairbanks, gives him the only safe haven from worshippers and autograph seekers, and the two are married. The misfortunes of popularity are increased by the assumption of a position with a company headed by Oscar Apfel. The nerve-wracking experience takes its toll on married life, and Fairbanks and Miss Brian separate, both to return to their respective parents' home in the same small town. When Fairbanks reaches the top point of endurance and breaks with employer and manager, the two are reconciled and return to New York and home.

The audience at the New York Strand seemed to extract a reasonable amount of pleasant entertainment from the effort, with definite comment highly favorable concerning the manner in which Fairbanks handles the role of the harassed young hero.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by Alfred Green. Story by Mary McCall, Jr. Adaptation by Robert Lord. Cameraman, Sol Polito. Release date, April 2, 1932. Running time, 79 minutes.

Women Who Play

Paramount

Lonsdale's Play

(Seen in London)

Arthur Rosson has tackled this "Spring Cleaning" job without creating the mess usually associated with the operation. But he has failed to convey much of the spick and span results which spring cleaning leaves in its wake, certain comment indicated.

A fine list of the best British players, headed by the American, Mary Newcombe, makes a scintilating cast, and the work they put in is sound. The story concerns an unconventional author, bored by the inane society chatter of his wife's frequent party visitors, who takes home one evening a woman of easy virtue. Neither he nor the woman make any secret of the matter; both sit down to dine with the wife and her society friends, whom the author exposes as no better but a little less honest than the prostitute. Complications result, but the final touch sees the author and his wife reconciled, and their married life placed on a sounder basis.

Well mounted and acted, there is perhaps too much dialogue. There is one very effective scene, in which talk is well justified, when the author and his wife's would-be lover come to grips on the subject of society versus morals. Mary Newcomb plays the husband's friend.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Arthur Rosson. Art direction, Holmes Paul. Running time, 79 minutes.

SHORTS

Meet the Princess

(Universal)

Certainly

Slim Summerville, lengthy Marine bugler, and Harry Gribbon, his most obnoxious top sergeant, are always good for numerous laughs, in this case not less so. Gribbon is delegated to take the colonel's dog out for an airing, and succeeds in humorously palming off the dog on Slim. It is hardly a fair exchange, however, because Gribbon takes Slim's special feminine friend at the same time. It is all done humorously. Much excitement, also, when Gribbon cuts down an historically significant tree.—Running time, 17 minutes.

The Duck Hunt

Funny

An amusing cartoon, in which Mickey Mouse, himself, goes hunting for ducks. His maneuvers in pursuit of the feathered game are really animatedly funny. The hound dog which accompanies Mickey supplies more than a few laughs in addition. The background music is pleasant.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Hide and Seek

(Paramount)

Clever

A clever and highly amusing Talkartoons number, with Mr. Kidnaper hot on the trail of the animated girl who draws money from the bank. The traffic cop gets in his licks, and it is all done in an engagingly amusing cartoon fashion.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Air Mail Mystery

Thrills, Action

Here's a new serial, and if the first three chapters, projection room-shown, are any indication of what to expect from the remaining nine installments, here is an action-filled screen yarn that should bring the youngsters up standing in their seats. Each installment runs two reels. Action takes place in, around and over the Mojave Desert, with aeroplanes and automobiles as the chief means of locomotion. Jimmy Ross and Bob Lee are partners in a gold mine, and the story principally concerns their attempts to get their bullion to the mint despite the opposition of one Black Hawk. The latter catapults his plane from its landing place on treacherous ground, and makes a thrilling aeroplane drop via parachute. Fast-paced auto sequences and a few air battles have the film racing along. James Flavin heads the cast with Lucile Brown as attractive heroine. Ray Taylor directed.—Running time, 18 minutes (each installment).

Sportslants

(Vitaphone)

Winter Action

In this number of the series, Ted Husing, sports announcer, takes the audience to Lake Placid and the recent winter Olympics. Seen in action are several of the most noted of fancy skaters, the speed skaters, cross country and speed skiiers, and the famed and hazardous bob-sled run. Best shots include those on the sled run and the aerial shots of the skiiers in mid air during their thrilling leaps. Appealing and vitally active.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Swim or Sink

(Paramount)

Amusing Cartoon

One of the Fleisher Talkertoon cartoon numbers and a laughable short. Bimbo and Koko land on a raft during a storm and are picked up by a pirate ship's crew of animateds. A whale devours all of the pirates and the lovers are left to themselves. It is all rather clever and amusing.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Big Hearted Bosko

(Vitaphone)

They'll Laugh

Little animated Bosko goes skating with his lop-eared hound, and finds a baby in a basket on the ice. They take it home, and try to quiet it. Their success is quite conspicuous by its absence, until they hit upon the musical jazz formula. The baby not only likes it but stands up in the cradle and joins in. Clever enough, amusing enough.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Producers Group Sees Film Errors

The Association of Motion Picture Producers, on the Coast, has compiled a complete list of inaccurate details occasionally found in motion pictures.

The following suggestions were included in the complete list:

"British officers in war time do not wear rank badges on the shoulder straps. Always on the cuffs.

"Flying officers do not wear leggings. Always riding boots or puttees.

"Care should be taken that cap badges agree with collar badges.

"Anti-aircraft guns do not fire during aerial combat.

"Aircraft carrying bombs were not allowed to fly over towns.

"Bright buttons were forbidden while in action. Smoking was also forbidden.

"When addressing superior officers one always said 'Sir.'

"One never saluted with the hat off. Standing at attention is all.

"English butlers are generally well-educated and do not misplace their "h's."

"In England no self-respecting man would wear a straw hat with a dinner suit.

"When a man comes in from a torrential downpour he is generally wet. Some film-stars seem to be able to walk between the drops.

"Some film-stars seem also to be quick-change artists, as they go out of one door in one suit and come in again in a moment in another.

"Scotland Yard detective officers do not always carry firearms and only use them in cases of extreme danger.

"Time tables should be carefully studied."

Warner Studio Holds Pace With Six in Work in Month

Six pictures are in production and five in preparation at the Warner First National Coast studio, which is maintaining a schedule of six films a month.

In work at the moment are: "The Dark Horse," "Week-end Marriage," "The Jewel Robbery," "Street of Women," "Doctor X," "A Successful Calamity." In preparation are: "Silver Dollar," "New York Town," "S. S. Atlantic," "The Mudlark," "Competition."

Big Four to Use Bonus Plan To Stimulate Feature Sales

A new sales and playdate promotion scheme is being originated by Big 4 Film Corporation, according to Charles L. Glett, vice-president. It is their "$15,000 Dividend Drive," a permanent accumulating arrangement which will apply to certain product already produced by this organization, but the arrangement now under consideration will permit of a pro rated playdate arrangement which will give money to many individuals connected with the interrelated exchanges which hold Big 4 franchises.

Fleischmann Resigns Post As Loew Construction Head

Leon Fleischmann, for the past seven years in charge of the theatre construction department of Loew's circuit, has resigned his post. The resignation has been accepted by Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's. Fleischmann's future plans are said to be awaiting his return from a vacation.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of box office receipts from major key situations for the calendar week ended April 9, 1932, reaches $2,262,581 for 180 theatres in 30 cities, a decrease of $198,700 from the total for the previous calendar week, ended April 2, when 181 theatres in 30 key cities recorded a total of $2,461,281. One new high individual theatre figure was established during the more recent week, at the Keith in Boston, with "Steady Company," while five new low individual house records were noted. This compares with three new "highs" and five new "lows" during the preceding week.

VARIETY KEEPS EVERYBODY HAPPY

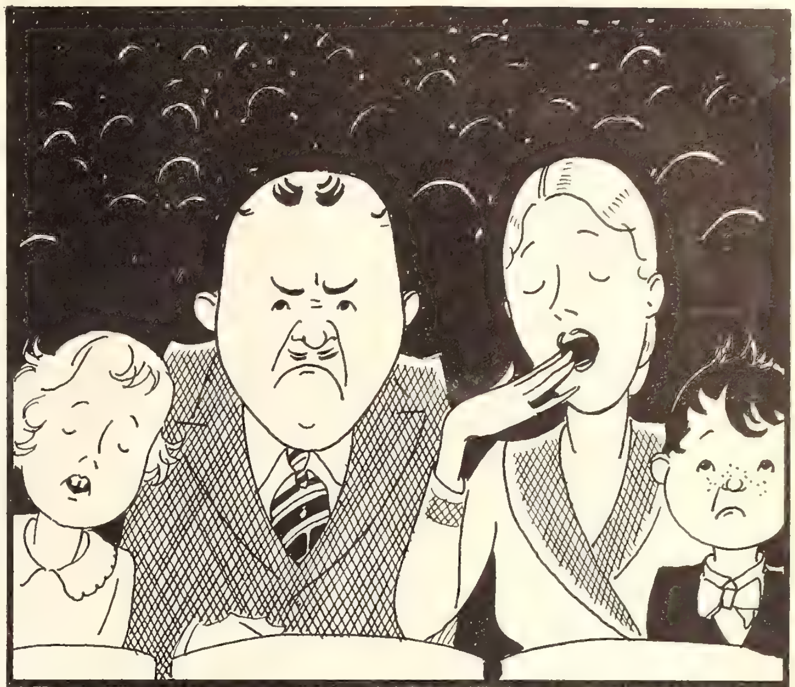
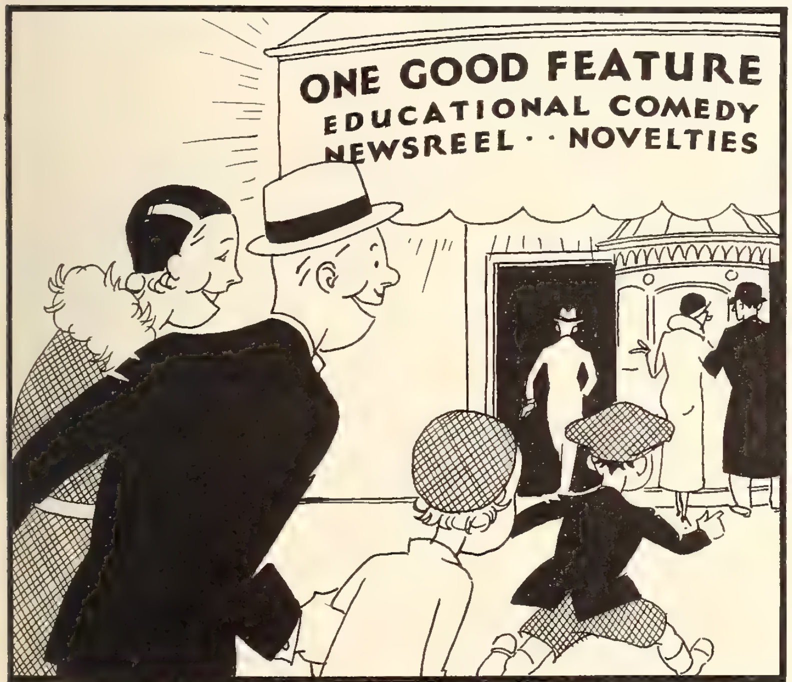
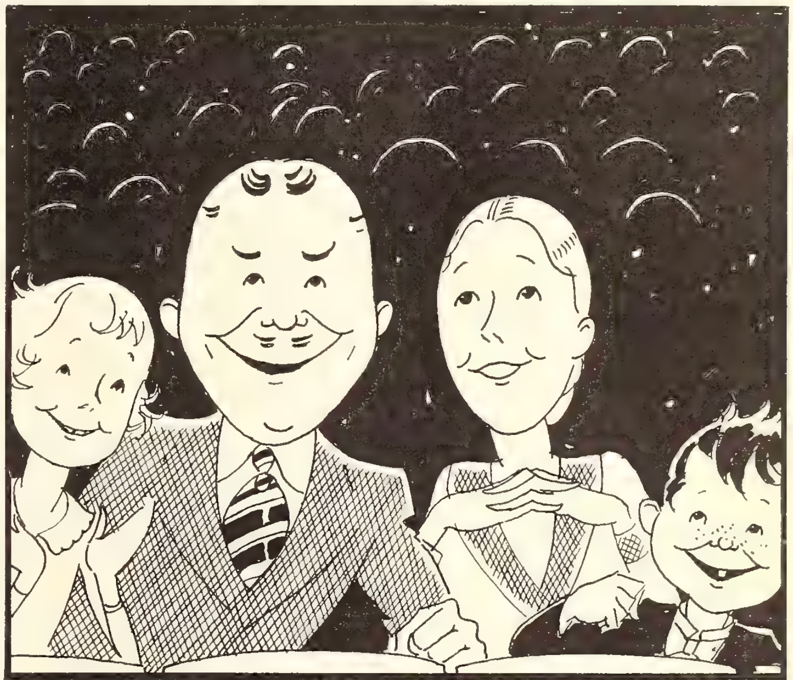
WHEN YOU DRAG THE WHOLE FAMILY IN WITH A "BARGAIN OFFER". . .



AND HALF OF THEM GO TO SLEEP. . THEY CAN'T CONSIDER THAT A "GOOD BUY"



BUT A GOOD VARIETY PROGRAM PROMISES AMUSEMENT FOR ALL . .



AND KEEPS ITS PROMISE . . MAKING EVERYBODY HAPPY. .

You're not in a "one sale" business. You have to keep your customers coming back if you want to succeed. And the way to do that is to keep everybody happy . . . . with a good balanced show . . . . one fine Feature . . . . and plenty of variety . . . . with selections from Educational Pictures' great short feature program. Try it out through May and watch it click . . . . the public demands comedy and variety, with quality . . . . and Educational Pictures satisfy that demand.

PROOF that TRAILERS DO SELL SEATS!

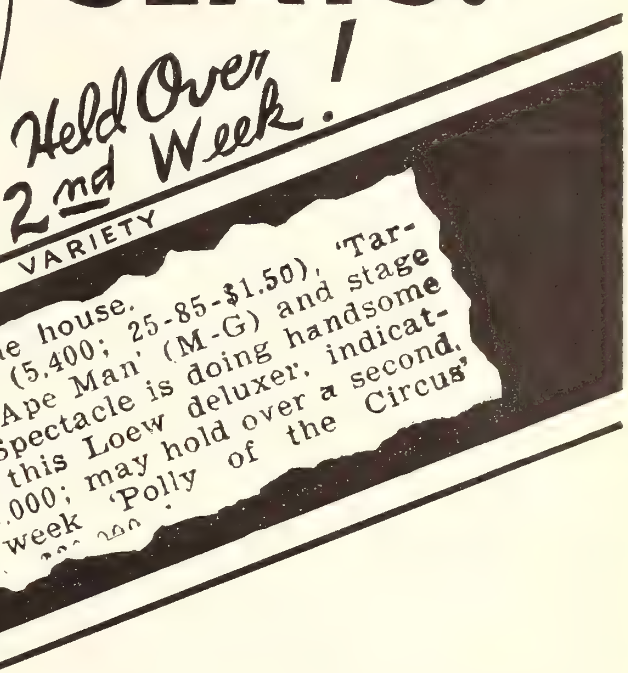
MOTION PICTURE DAILY

The Pay-Off

STRIKING demonstration of the seat-pulling power of punchy trailers may be had by all who seek it at the Capitol where highlight shots from "Tarzan" are now part of each de luxe performance. Presumably immune and sometimes described as hard-boiled, we're in the open long enough to admit that here was one trailer, at least, which decided us in favor of the picture. Friday will find us in that house to see whether the film meets the promise the trailer held forth. Even if it doesn't the point is we'll be there. And the trailer is responsible.

KANN.

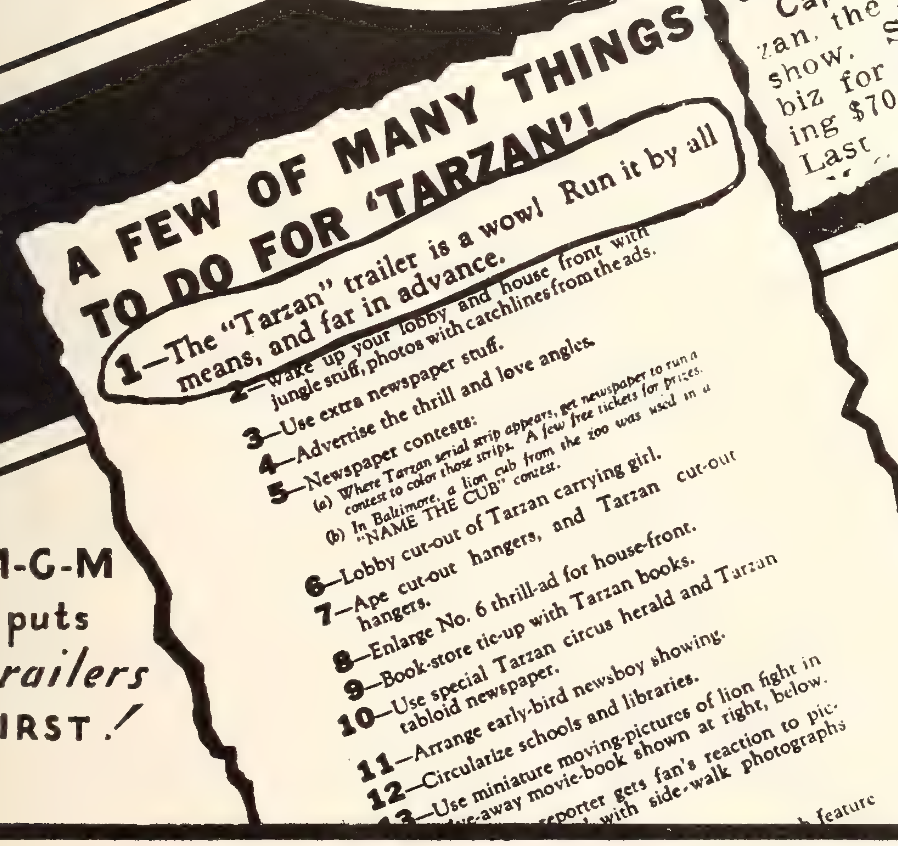


Held Over 2nd Week!

VARIETY

else for the house.

Capitol (5,400; 25-85-$1.50), 'Tarzan, the Ape Man' (M-G) and stage show. Spectacle is doing handsome biz for this Loew deluxer, indicating $70,000; may hold over a second. Last week 'Polly of the Circus'



A FEW OF MANY THINGS TO DO FOR 'TARZAN'!

1—The "Tarzan" trailer is a wow! Run it by all means, and far in advance.
2—Wake up your lobby and house front with jungle stuff, photos with catchlines from the ads.
3—Use extra newspaper stuff.
4—Advertise the thrill and love angles.
5—Newspaper contests:
  (a) Where Tarzan serial strip appears, get newspaper to run a contest to color those strips. A few free tickets for prizes.
  (b) In Baltimore, a lion cub from the zoo was used in a "NAME THE CUB" contest.
6—Lobby cut-out of Tarzan carrying girl.
7—Ape cut-out hangers, and Tarzan cut-out hangers.
8—Enlarge No. 6 thrill-ad for house-front.
9—Book-store tie-up with Tarzan books.
10—Use special Tarzan circus herald and Tarzan tabloid newspaper.
11—Arrange early-bird newsboy showing.
12—Circularize schools and libraries.
13—Use miniature moving-pictures of lion fight in give-away movie-book shown at right, below.
reporter gets fan's reaction to pic- with side-walk photographs feature

M-G-M puts trailers FIRST!

Nobody can write an ad that carries the same punch and selling wallop of a trailer! You can say a picture is "thrilling" but with a trailer you show them with actual scenes and that's what sells them! And there's no waste circulation — everybody sees your "ad" on the screen! Smart showmen will tell you there are many ways to exploit a picture but the TRAILER always heads the list!

MPPDA May Rebate Some Dues; Lesser In For Schnitzer

The Hays organization will be enabled to rebate a portion of members' dues, as a result of economies in operation, it was stated at the board of directors' tenth annual meeting on Monday. The meeting also considered a suggestion of Phil Goldstone, Coast producer, that members of the Independent Motion Picture Producers' Association should be invited to membership in the Hays organization. No action was taken on the Goldstone proposal.

Sol Lesser, president of Principal Distributing Corporation, has replaced Joseph I. Schnitzer, former president of Radio Pictures, on the board of directors. It now totals, 17 members: Hiram S. Brown, Charles H. Christie, Harley L. Clarke, R. H. Cochrane, Cecil B. De Mille, D. W. Griffith, Earle W. Hammons, Will H. Hays, Frederick L. Herron, Sol Lesser, J. J. Murdock, David Sarnoff, Joseph M. Schenck, Nicholas M. Schenck, A. W. Warner, H. M. Warner and Adolph Zukor.

Officers re-elected for another year are:

Will H. Hays, president; Carl E. Milliken, secretary; Frederick L. Herron, treasurer and George Borthwick, assistant treasurer.

Charlton Buys Play for New Production Company

Theodore Charlton, president of Theodore Charlton, Inc., a new independent producing corporation recently organized, has closed with General Play Company for "Mohawk Trail," a melodrama by the late H. Grattan Donnelly, author of "Darkest Russia." Charlton also announces that he is preparing his first production, entitled "Liebestraum," a musical drama adapted from the play of Franz Liszt. This adaptation was made by Andrew L. Stone, formerly director for Sono-Art and George Weeks productions.

Lem F. Kennedy, former Fox, Universal and Pathe director, is to direct "Mohawk Trail." The continuity and dialogue will be prepared by S. John Park, and Leonard Mitchill will supervise sound recording.

Goldstone Reaches Agreement With Cameramen on the Coast

Phil Goldstone, who claims to be financing 90 per cent of the independent production on the Coast, and who threatened to quit the independents because of the demands of the technical unions, has come to an agreement with the International Photographers Local No. 569 on future productions. The union will cooperate more with Goldstone on any picture in which he has an interest.

The union will deal with Goldstone instead of separate deals being made with each company, on terms eliminating any chance of the union taking any men off the lot as has been done in the past. The agreement further eliminates paying the crew daily by the independent producer, with Goldstone guaranteeing weekly salaries where due.

STENOGRAPHERS PASS JUDGMENT

Stenographers and secretaries at the Warner home office one day this week took an hour off and went to the motion pictures. But it wasn't altogether a pastime, being rather in the nature of an assignment. When the Coast studio shipped on the film, "The Rich Are Always With Us," for the executive screening and suggested it had feminine appeal, the home office decided to try it on the feminine element. The femininity invited was requested, at the end of the screening to write its candid opinion of the picture, starring Ruth Chatterton, without revealing its identity. Perhaps they all said it was good.

Producers' Pact Comes Up April 20

Reports of the branches of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the recently adopted producers' arbitration agreement will be presented to the directors at a meeting April 20, postponed from April 5.

The agreement, signed by virtually all the major producing companies, concerns employment negotiations with persons under contract or continuously employed by one company for two pictures or for six months prior to the negotiations.

Three Russian Film Leaders Get Life Terms for Sabotage

Three motion picture leaders in Russia, Art director Leonidov, production manager Ignatenko and factory director Koonin have had sentences of death commuted to life imprisonment. They were found guilty of sabotage in the Soviet film industry. All are important film figures in Central Asia.

The sentence of Leonidov, in particular, was commuted because of his heroic career in the revolution. The defendants were charged with graft and dissipation and with producing films distorting the Bolshevik viewpoint.

United Artists Borrows Joan Crawford; MGM Shares Profit

Joan Crawford has been selected as the star of United Artists production of "Rain," in a deal noted as the first joint production agreement between major companies. MGM, to whom Miss Crawford is under contract, will share in the film's profits, under the deal.

Board, Follow-Up Meetings Planned by Allied April 28

The board of directors of Allied States Association will meet at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, at 10:30 A. M., Thursday, April 28. At the same time a meeting of the recent convention "follow-up" committee will be held.

Poster Exchanges Organize to Fight Distributor Policy

A national organization of poster exchanges was organized during a two-day meeting in Chicago this week to combat distributor policies regulating the disposition of advertising accessories, wherever these policies threaten the existence of the independent poster exchanges. The meeting is recognized as having been an outgrowth of the efforts of Fox Film Corporation to require exhibitors to return accessories to the company's exchanges within a limited time after their use, thus preventing resale to the poster houses.

The new organization will represent more than 30 independent poster exchanges located in all sections of the country and will be known as the National Poster Service Association, Inc. Members and newly elected officers refused comment on the course of opposition to distributors' policies which will be followed by the organization but indicated that a budget and financing program for this purpose had been approved at the meeting. The defense budget will approximate $100,000, according to reports.

Officers of the organization are: Simon Libros, Philadelphia, president; Irvin Levin, Omaha, vice president; George Aarons, Philadelphia, secretary-treasurer. The following were elected directors: H. A. Cole, Texas; R. H. Robison, Atlanta; H. Schlitt, L. Weinzimer and E. R. Behrend, of New York. Headquarters will be maintained in Philadelphia.

The purpose of the organization was said to be "for the mutual protection of members and for the dissemination and advice to members of matters pertaining directly and indirectly to the business of poster service."

The organization was pledged the support of independent exhibitors who were represented at the meeting by Aaron Saperstein, president of Allied Theatre Owners of Illinois.

Meanwhile, Columbia Pictures alligned itself with Fox by adding a clause to all accessory invoices stipulating that advertising material is leased and not sold, and must not be resold by the exhibitor. Paramount, too, is employing this clause, which is stamped on accessory invoices. Fox recently effected an agreement with Skouras-operated theatres to conform to the poster return requirements, and is now engaged in similar negotiations with Rinzler & Frisch circuit, New York, and has further conferences in prospect with Lee Ochs for an identical arrangement with houses operated by him.

Visual Aid Greatest Gift To Teaching, Says Milliken

Visual aid in instruction was called the outstanding gift of the new century to the teaching profession, by Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the MPPDA, speaking before the Ohio State Educational Conference at Columbus, last week.

Milliken, reviewing 10 years of experimentation in educational films by the motion picture industry, said: "The motion picture is the most versatile, the most dramatic, the most potentially useful of visual instruction aids."

SELECTIONS

Made by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

Family Suitability

AMATEUR DADDY VERY GOOD

Fox

An adaptation of Mildred Cram's novel, "Scotch Valley" offers unusually pleasant entertainment. A promise to a friend to protect his family brings an engineer to the valley where he finds villainy at work. (Warner Baxter, Marion Nixon, David Landau.)

AVALANCHE EXCELLENT

First Division

Notwithstanding a thinly woven romance and inconsequential plot, this picture is a photographic epic of a hell of snow and ice and a heaven of amazing cloud beauty. It is taken at the crest of Mt. Blanc and tells the story of the Government's weather expert there.

THE BIG TIMER GOOD

Columbia

Success proves too much for a young fighter who has worked his way up. His anger aroused by a conversation he overhears, he plans a comeback. (Ben Lyon, Constance Cummings, Thelma Todd, Robert O'Connor.)

THE COHENS AND KELLYS IN HOLLYWOOD GOOD

Universal

A clever and amusing story of two families who go to Hollywood to make their fortunes. Their fall is as sudden as their rise and they decide that real happiness lies in their old home town. (Charles Murray, Esther Howard, June Clyde, George Sidney.)

COUNTY FAIR GOOD

Monogram

The whole family may see this picture. It has a wholesome romance, a good plot and a feeling of sufficient reproof for crooked gambling. Suitable for boys' schools. (Hobart Bosworth, Marian Schilling, Ralph Ince, William Collier, Jr.)

EMIL UND DIE DETEKTIVE GOOD

Ufa

Here is a picture of children and their activities. Delightful for grownups and serious enough in theme to make it a valuable family audience feature.

THE FIGHTING FOOL GOOD

Columbia

A series of exciting adventures with a fearless sheriff as the hero and a Montana town as a setting. There are fighting, fast action and good riding. (Tim McCoy, Arthur Rankin, Marceline Day.)

HEART OF HELL GOOD

Action

Another picture of the African jungle, which dramatizes the hunt for ivory by white men, and the hardships encountered in the primitive country. (Jack Mulhall and Barbara Weeks.)

HIGH SPEED GOOD

Columbia

A race track driver is killed and his mechanic assumes the care of his crippled son. After many adventures which include the driving of a police car and the capture of a bank bandit, the mechanic wins an important race and also the girl he loves. It is good family entertainment and will particularly please the boys. (Buck Jones, Loretta Sayers.)

THE OFFICE GIRL GOOD

Gaumont-British

"The Office Girl" tells, with delicious freshness and gay comedy, the efforts of a young girl to land a job in a big Viennese bank. She meets Herr Director in the off hours and finds herself a most acceptable husband. (Renate Muller, Owen Nares and Jack Hulbert.)

POLICE COURT GOOD

Monogram

Vivid interesting story, teaching a splendid lesson of a versatile actor, an habitual drunkard and his son who is making every effort to help him overcome this vice. (H. B. Walthall, King Baggott and Aileen Pringle.)

SOUTH OF THE RIO GRANDE GOOD

Columbia

A story of bravery and accomplishments of "Rurales," the mounted police of old Mexico under President Diaz. Riding and fights between police and outlaws with background of rugged mountain country make an interesting adventure story, particularly for boys. (Charles (Buck) Jones, Lambert Hillyer, Mona Maris and Dorothy Hill.)

SOUTH SEA ADVENTURES VERY GOOD

Principal Pictures

This is a thrilling and beautifully photographed story of Zane Grey's fishing adventures in the South Sea Islands. It is educational, artistic, and exciting. The New York audiences attending the show looked like men's conventions.

TINGEL TANGEL VERY GOOD

Fritz Engel Film Company

A German language musical comedy in which an outstanding performance is given by Schlumsi, a remarkably trained small dog. As a stray, he is adopted into a young man's home and proceeds to clear the hindrances to his master's happiness. An enjoyable family picture. (Fritz Kampers, Elizabeth Pinajeff, Ernst Verebes, Schlumsi, the Wonder Dog.)

VANITY FAIR GOOD

Allied Pictures

This is a modern adaptation of the English classic of Thackeray. It is the translation of a classic, pleasantly done and good entertainment for family audience. (Myrna Loy, Conway Tearle, Barbara Kent.)

WHISTLING DAN GOOD

Tiffany

Ken Maynard, riding a beautiful white horse in fine Western style, is the hero of a thrilling border story. Spectacular riding, terrific fighting and a little romance make this an interesting picture. (Ken Maynard.)

WILD WOMEN OF BORNEO GOOD

First Division

A feature length travelogue that includes Mexico, Singapore and the Island of Borneo. It follows the ordinary travel path with the exception of a few unusual scenes.

YOUNG AMERICA EXCELLENT

Fox

This picture is unique for having won a unanimous endorsement and the highest rating of all previewing groups. It is a story of the children's court. It has strong heart appeal, laughter and deep sadness. But it is an important document and is an honor to the screen. All groups have rated this "Excellent." (Spencer Tracy, Dorothy Kenyon.)

Adult Suitability

AFTER TOMORROW GOOD

Fox

"After Tomorrow" tells the simple and human story of a boy and girl who, after years of struggle with poverty and domestic difficulties, attain their goal—marriage and a honeymoon at Niagara Falls. The acting is realistic and, notwithstanding some inconsistencies, the direction is satisfactory. Amusing and entertaining for the average audience. (Charles Farrell, Marian Nixon.)

ALIAS THE DOCTOR VERY GOOD

First National

A convincing and appealing interpretation of the adopted son who shoulders the criminal act of his foster brother in order to save the mother disappointment. Production is excellent and the scene in the operating room is graphically presented. (Richard Barthelmess and Marian Marsh.)

ARE YOU LISTENING? GOOD

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

In this melodramatic story, with its radio background, a young man, married to a mercenary and nagging wife, falls in love with a girl in the broadcasting department. Unhappiness and tragedy are the inevitable results of this unfortunate and unethical situation. Well cast, well acted and well directed. (William Haines, Madge Evans, Anita Page, Karen Morley, Neil Hamilton.)

THE CANNONBALL EXPRESS GOOD

Sono Art-World Wide

An old fashioned melodrama dealing with the lives of a railroad engineer and his two sons who follow their father's line of work. An old type of story fairly well presented. (Tom Moore, Lucile Brown, Leon Waycoff.)

CROSS EXAMINATION VERY GOOD

Artclass

A courtroom melodrama based on a murder mystery with well sustained suspense. Flashbacks show the story to the audience as the witnesses testify. It is convincing. (H. B. Warner, Sally Blane, Natalie Moorhead, Edmund Breese.)

DEADLOCK GOOD

Empire Films

A murder mystery solved in an unusual manner by the eye of the camera, this film provides thrilling entertainment for those who like their detective stories visualized. (Stewart Rome, Warwick Ward.)

THE DEVIL'S LOTTERY VERY GOOD

Fox

Lord Litchfield invites the four winners of the Calcutta sweepstakes to his country home for the weekend, in order to observe their various reactions to the possession of this sudden wealth. He is given food for thought in the outcome, which includes romance, mystery and murder. An interesting picture with an unusual plot well worked out. Excellent direction and commendable acting. (Elissa Landi, Paul Cavanagh, Alexander Kirkland, Beryl Mercer, Victor McLaglen.)

DISORDERLY CONDUCT
Fox VERY GOOD

Though the title is frightening, this is an unusually well directed picture with fine dramatic power and strongly sustained interest. It is the story of the problems that confront the police department, a handsome, efficient motorcycle "cop," and the long uphill pull for policemen to remain honest. (Sally Eilers and Spencer Tracy.)

THE FAMOUS FERGUSON CASE
Warner-First National GOOD

A story by Courtney Terett that offers interesting information regarding the methods used by a conservative newspaper and the questionable ways of the tabloids. The dramatic and educational values are strong. (Joan Blondell, Tom Brown, Adrienne Dore, Vivienne Osborne, Leslie Fenton.)

DAS FLOTENKONZERT VON SANSSOUCI
(The Flute Concert of Sanssouci) VERY GOOD
Ufa

This is an excellently produced historical film in which many of the scenes are reproductions of the paintings by Adolph Menzel. It tells the story of Frederick the Great, of the Prussias, and has some splendid bits of directing.

GHOST CITY
Monogram GOOD

A newspaper editor follows an enemy into a new town to destroy him with publicity. News of a gold strike empties the town, and lost papers involving land claims form the main part of the story. Restrained love interest and plenty of action with skillful riding give this Western story good entertainment value.

THE HEART OF NEW YORK
Warner GOOD

From David Freeman's play, "Mendel, Inc." This is a very pleasing picture, full of the humorous situations that usually accompany a story of the lower East Side. George Sidney makes the inventor an easy-going, likable fellow, improvident, but loving his family just the same. (Charles Dale, George Sidney and Ruth Hale.)

HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES, THE Ideal, British-Gaumont VERY GOOD

A Sir Conan Doyle story has been brought to life in this film. The background of lonely country is excellent and the action tense and exciting. A good Scotland Yard mystery. (Robert Rendal, Fred Lloyd.)

IT'S TOUGH TO BE FAMOUS
Warner-First National VERY GOOD

A young submarine officer becomes a public hero after rescuing his twelve comrades. The resulting publicity nearly wrecks his happiness. It is an interesting and clever satire on hero worship and is the novel, "Goldfish Bowl," brought to the screen. (Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Mary Brian, Walter Catlett.)

School and Screen on Air Attracting Attention

The Saturday morning radio broadcasts, under the name of School and Screen, a department of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and written by Rita C. McGoldrick, who conducts that department, are attracting wide attention from radio audiences. Last Saturday, the chief speaker was Conrad Nagel, who was a guest at station WMAQ, Chicago. Favorable comment, especially from club groups and educators, followed the broadcast.

LAW OF THE WEST
Tiffany GOOD

A child grows up in an outlaw camp believing the leader is his father. His attempt, when a young man, to leave the camp and the adventures that lead finally to reunion with his own parents are the bases of a realistic western story. Beautiful scenery and skillful riding add to entertainment value. (Bob Steele, Nancy Drexel, Ed Brady, Hank Bell.)

LENA RIVERS
Tiffany GOOD

Horse racing and an automobile accident bring an estranged father and daughter understanding and a family reunion. (Charlotte Henry, Beryl Mercer, James Kirkwood and Betty Blythe.)

THE LONE TRAIL
Syndicate VERY GOOD

A convincing and original Western with an interesting plot, little love interest and plenty of action. The work of King, the dog, adds much. (Rex Lease, Edmund Cobb, Billy O'Brien, Virginia Brown Faire, King, the dog.)

MIRACLE MAN, THE Paramount EXCELLENT

A well-known silent picture becomes vocal, with a strong cast giving a dramatically fine performance. The story concerns an old healer, the trust that people have in him, and a group of crooks who, attempting to exploit the miracle man, finally come to believe in him and his way of life. A spiritual element in pictures is all too unusual. (Sylvia Sydney, Chester Morris, Irving Pichel, John Wray, Robert Coogan.)

MISSING REMBRANDT, THE British Productions VERY GOOD

A Conan Doyle mystery story usually offers satisfactory entertainment, and this one, based on "The Adventures of Charles Augustus Milverton," is no exception. Sherlock Holmes solves the main plot, dealing with the theft of a Rembrandt, and a secondary one of blackmail and stolen letters. (Arthur Wontner, Ian Fleming, Minnie Raynor, Francis L. Sullivan, Miles Mauder.)

SIN'S PAY DAY
Action GOOD

The regeneration of an underworld lawyer through the help of a child, is the basis of this story. There are strong dramatic moments and both direction and photography are good. (Dorothy Revier, Forrest Stanley, Mickey McGuire.)

SO BIG
Warner VERY GOOD

"So Big," taken from Edna Ferber's prize novel, presents the struggle of a widowed mother to educate her son and aid him in his choice of a career. Excellent thematic value. (Barbara Stanwyck, George Brent, Dickie Moore, Bette Davis.)

STUERME DER LEIDENSCHAFT
(Tempest) EXCELLENT
Ufa

A grim story of Berlin's underworld that offers Mr. Jannings, in the role of a bank robber, ample opportunity for his dramatic gifts. There are gripping scenes and the story interest carries from beginning to end. English subtitles help those not familiar with the German language. (Emil Jannings, Anna Sten, Franz Nicklisch, Anton Pointner.)

THE THEFT OF THE MONA LISA
Tobis EXCELLENT

A German musical film drama, based on the theft from the Louvre in 1911 of Leonardo da Vinci's famous painting. The main idea is a serious one but it has been developed into a clever and amusingly original plot that provides excellent entertainment and is easily understood without a knowledge of German. (Willy Forst, Trude von Molo, Gustaf Guendgens, Fritz Odemar.)

EIN WALZER VOM STRAUSS
(A Waltz by Strauss) EXCELLENT
Splendid Film Company

A Strauss romance of great charm. The picture is built around the early career of Johann Strauss, the younger, and included in it are his waltzes, as well as those of his famous father. It is a simple, fresh and attractive film with the acting above average and the music delightful. (Hans Junkermann and Julia Serda.)

WET PARADE
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer EXCELLENT

This picture is unusual because, with its controversial theme, it has merited the highest endorsement of every reviewing group. It is a definitely honest attempt to present both sides of the prohibition problem, based on Upton Sinclair's story. It deals with the ruin and disintegration of a fine old Southern family through the habit of social drinking; the passing of the Eighteenth Amendment, and the demoralization that results from its lax enforcement. The plea is made for temperance and against liquor rather than for or against prohibition. (Lewis Stone, Dorothy Jordan, Neil Hamilton, Walter Huston, Robert Young.)

Short Subjects

ALL AROUND THE TOWN
Educational VERY GOOD

Views of the tall buildings, busy streets, public squares and parks of New York City. Excellent photography and good musical accompaniment.

ALPINE ECHOES
Magic Carpet Series VERY GOOD
Fox

Mountain climbing in the Alps and the echoes of the musical yodeling of the mountaineers.

ATHLETIC DAZE
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer EXCELLENT

Preparation for the Olympics and the comparison of training and uniforms of this year and of years ago.

BABBLING BOOK VERY GOOD
Paramount

Burns and Allen, in a book store, offer amusing comedy.

THE CAT'S CANARY
Van Beuren EXCELLENT

An Aesop's Fable of delicious comedy—here is something of joy and laughter in this one. It is better than the average. It tells the story of the cat who swallowed his bird and becomes musically inclined.

CROSBY, COLUMBO AND VALLEE
Vitaphone VERY GOOD

Short cartoon subject based on the popular song hit by the same name. Synchronization good.

CURIOSITIES NO. 231 VERY GOOD
Columbia

Interesting curiosities from all parts of the world.

FISHERMAN'S FORTUNE
Fox (Magic Carpet Series) VERY GOOD

The boats leave Boston for the Grand Banks, the famous fishing grounds off the coast of Newfoundland, and return only when the holds are filled with fish. There are wonderful pictures of the boats in a storm.

FLYING LEATHER VERY GOOD
RKO-Pathe

Boxing lessons as taught in the University of Pennsylvania, some rounds by professionals in Miami and the practice of the art by small boys in Florida sand, are shown in this interesting film.

GIGGLE WATER EXCELLENT
RKO-Pathe

A really laughable comedy results from the efforts of a family to keep intact a bottle of champagne to be used in the christening of a reconditioned launch. (Edgar Kennedy.)

HEARST NEWS VERY GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Current international news.

A HURRY CALL VERY GOOD
RKO-Radio

An amusing farce in which Chic Sale trades a horse and seemingly gets the better of the bargain until he discovers the horse understands only French. The high point of interest arises when Chic forgets the French word for "stop" and, like the proverbial brook, the horse goes "on and on." Particularly appealing to adults as well as juveniles.

IRELAND, THE MELODY ISLE
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer VERY GOOD

This spirited production has caught the grace and charm of Ireland, her fields and riverbanks, her hills and valleys, her rugged loneliness, her homes and her huts. Fine musical score.

KNOMORE COLLEGE VERY GOOD
Paramount

Rudy Vallee, a professor, has been brought to Knomore College to teach the pupils who are particularly stupid. He succeeds in doing this by rhyme and rhythm.

LIVING GOD OF THE MONGOLS
Talking Picture Epics EXCELLENT

A most interesting travelogue through the Gobi Desert and Mongolia. Splendid photography and unusual subject matter result in a noteworthy picture.

MAD DOG VERY GOOD
Columbia

Excellent animated cartoon. The gags, comic situations and synchronization are especially well done. (Mickey Mouse.)

MAKING GOOD VERY GOOD
Universal

An animated cartoon to the tune of the "Old Woman Who Lived in the Shoe." Amusing and clever.

Talking Picture Epics
MANCHURIA VERY GOOD

A resume of the situations which led to the present crisis in Manchuria. Interesting pictures contrast the towns and their natural resources.

MY LADIES' ESCAPADE VERY GOOD
Kendall-DeVally Operalogue

This operalogue, taken from the opera "Martha," is most enjoyable. The music is played in an artistic manner, the quaint costumes are interesting and the scenery beautiful. One regrets the brevity of the picture, but the parts shown are most worthwhile and will please all ages.

THE MYSTERY OF MARRIAGE VERY GOOD
British International Productions

The parallel of the marriage urge in plants, animals and humans is shown in this well photographed educational short subject.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL NO. 8
Paramount VERY GOOD

This pictorial is especially timely as it shows some very beautiful views of Washington's home at Mount Vernon; there is also a demonstration of piano playing with the hands covered with mittens, and finally there are scenes of the dangerous Colorado River which is traversed by a group of young men in three frail looking boats.

PLAYGROUND OF THE MAMMALS
Educational VERY GOOD

A very remarkable short, showing sea life along the coast of California. This is a Mack Sennett production, accompanied by humorous quips. The "highbrow" of fishdom, the porpoise, is pictured for the first time under water. One also sees the harpooning of the whale, the capture of the swordfish and various queer fish that inhabit these seas.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS EXCELLENT
Paramount

Pictures of movieland years ago.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS NOS. 6 AND 7
Columbia EXCELLENT

Snapshots of numerous film stars at their homes, on golf links and at a premiere. (Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford, Jackie Cooper, Mitzi Green and Lionel Barrymore.)

SINO-JAPANESE CURSE EXCELLENT
World Art

A graphic picture of Manchuria and surrounding cities, showing marvelous resources, fine soil, coal, iron, ore, lumber, sheep raising. This makes a very intelligent and acceptable piece of entertainment for the family audience. Lecture by Norman Brokenshire, radio announcer.

TAKE YOUR PICK
RKO Radio VERY GOOD

Grantland Rice, in a delightful Sportlight, compares the sports of the North to those of the South.

THE TRAGEDY OF EVEREST
Capital Films EXCELLENT

We are introduced to the difficulties experienced in the climbing of Mount Everest in the 1924 expedition. (David Ross, lecturer.)

TREASURE ISLES EXCELLENT
Educational

Sailing for home aboard a magnificent modern steamer, the speaker recalls from his memory-book, pictures of the glamorous isles: The Bahamas and Jamaica. In technicolor.

TROUT FISHING EXCELLENT
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

This is an excellent presentation of fishing as one knows it in the same old stream and in the same old method. Lovers of trout fishing will revel in this short feature.

WAR IN CHINA EXCELLENT
Educational

These unusual pictures of the siege of Shanghai were produced in that city by Leon Britton and Charles Hugo. They bring in a clear and vivid way the suffering and tragedy of the war. The interpretation given by John S. Young is excellent.

WHIPPET RACING VERY GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Well photographed picture of training and racing of whippets.

England Starts Fifth Year of Quota Law

Fifteen per cent of all pictures now handled by British distributors in England must be domestically made under the quota provisions for the fifth year, now in effect. American companies operating there will, therefore, have to step up percentage of British pictures they handled either by making them on their own or by acquiring them from English producers.

Maximum under the quota act is set at 20 per cent and will be reached with the year beginning April 1, 1935 and ending March 31, 1936, at which time the ratio of British to foreign pictures exhibited will be one to five. The quota remains at 20 per cent until the law expires on September 30, 1938.

Jack Warner Returns to Coast

Jack Warner, vice president of Warner Bros. in charge of production, accompanied by Mrs. Warner, left Wednesday for Hollywood. In the seven weeks since he came east, Warner made a flying trip to England, bought the screen rights to two plays, five novels and stories, and signed up eight potential stars.

LET'S START AN ARGUMENT!

WE'RE coming out with a flat-footed statement.

HERE'S THE BEST AD YOU EVER SAW ON "THE MAN I KILLED!"

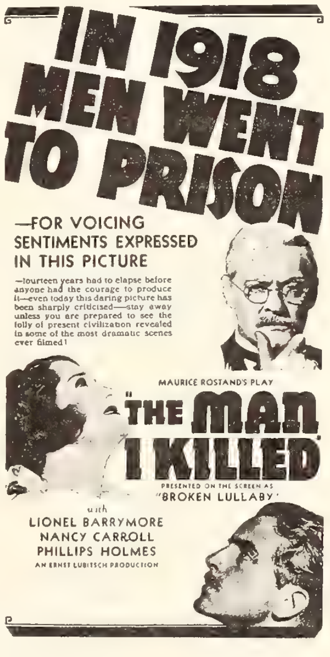
We're open for argument, after you've read this article. We're not setting ourselves up as an advertising authority but, we think we've seen enough copy go through the mill to know good advertising when we see it; outstanding, attention riveting, precedent busting, ticket selling copy such as this.

Why do we call it "the best"?

Simply because the man who conceived the idea—gave birth to this thought and followed through with the placing of the ad . . . collected at the box office in amounts sufficient to place the engagement well up in the black . . . and that's something darn few did—even though they had one of the greatest pictures of the year to sell.



IN 1918 MEN WENT TO PRISON

—FOR VOICING SENTIMENTS EXPRESSED IN THIS PICTURE

—fourteen years had to elapse before anyone had the courage to produce it—even today this daring picture has been sharply criticised—stay away unless you are prepared to see the folly of present civilization revealed in some of the most dramatic scenes ever filmed!

MAURICE ROSTAND'S PLAY
"THE MAN I KILLED"
PRESENTED ON THE SCREEN AS
"BROKEN LULLABY"

AN ERNST LUBITSCH PRODUCTION

Get this and get it straight!

When you get an unusual picture, then that picture must be sold in an unusual way—irrespective of what the exchange press sheet tells you.

One of the troubles with the motion picture industry right now is the litter of "usual" pictures and "usual" advertising.

If any studio has the business courage to give you an unusual picture then for the love of heaven get out and sell it in an unusual way. One merits the other and, most certainly, the two will have to go together if you are to register success on your weekly statement.

The making of motion pictures started some thirty years ago. The only change in it so far was the graduation from silent into talking pictures. There has been no change in the advertising. "Stupendous—colossal—tremendous—mastadonic" were in the dictionary thirty years ago and they are in it today. Without them the majority of press agents would be sunk and theatregoers would believe what they read in the newspapers.

Theatre advertising copy today—the run of it—describes basement tinware with the same selling language and argument . . . as the silks and satins . . . the gold and precious stones of the main floor center aisle. When we get away from this imbecilic habit of sameness maybe show business will get somewhere, but it won't until that day arrives. Maybe it will take a new crop of press agents and advertising copy writers . . . maybe it will take a couple of well attended funerals of higher-ups who are constantly killing good ideas but . . . some day, some place, it will arrive and then . . . Hoo-ray for originality, guts and intelligence.

Let's add a little more, then the floor is yours—whoever wants to pick up the argument.

Jameyson (yes, it was Howard E. of Kansas City) knew "The Man I Killed" or "Broken Lullaby," as the title the picture was released under, engagements had not been over successful with the usual advertising or a variety of it. Then, very smartly, Jameyson started to hit with both hands . . . hard and fast. Here's the result . . . in one town, Hutchison, Kansas, this ad brought in $600 better on the engagement than anything during the past six weeks and that—in the face of a snow and sleet blizzard.

And while calling a spade a spade for a change, isn't it about time that some of you "good" showmen grabbed yourselves a load of new ideas in picture selling via newspapers? How come you can lay claim to being such crackerjack ad men and then turn around and use the same old hash day in and day out? Has it occurred to you that each new picture presents some darned fine possibilities a great deal different from the last one?

Snap out of it. Think yourself up some ideas or find that alley where Jameyson locates all of those marvelous advertising slants. He's making his ads bring money to the box office, despite the fact that many of the pictures he must sell are far from the best. So can you. But you'll never get that way by using a pair of scissors and a paste pot. Try the old gray matter and become a bit revolutionary for a change. You may be surprised to find that it will boost business considerably and spur you on to further experiments along such lines.

But here; we've had all the say we have a right to at this time. Now some of you other fellows can pick up the argument from this point and show the rest of us where we stand.

Talk that off—go ahead—it's your turn now. "CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

WHAT CAN I DO? WITH BUSINESS WHAT IT IS!
BOB DAVIS STRAND DOLGEVILLE NY
Dick Kirschbaum

Hi! Ho! Seems as though the days are past when managers can run their theatre's "hi-class". Today it's a case of anything's O.K. if the customers will only buy themselves a couple of tickets for the shootin' gallery. "What next?" asks Bob Davis. . . . And we say, "Ditto".

(Dick thinks there must be many other amusing incidents which will look well on one of these cartoons. Send them along for a "Lobby Laff".)

COX USED SEVERAL STUNTS TO PUT OVER NEW AIRPLANE FILM

Use of several novel stunts helped Al J. Cox, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., put over "Hell Divers."

In one instance he tied up with a Five and Ten for the placing of a gold fish bowl in the window. The bowl was filled with carbonated water and a small quantity of camphor balls, which kept the latter bobbing up and down. Onlookers were asked to estimate the number of hours the balls would keep in motion.

He also used a vacant store window for exhibition of a parachute borrowed from a local aviator. A card called attention that the parachute held the world's altitude record, also making known that it was the same kind worn by the squadron in the picture coming to the Capitol. A fusilage was also borrowed from the local airport for lobby display.

Ushers also worked the store district and stamped bags and wrapping paper with copy reading, "Greatest Thriller of All Times—Hell Divers—Coming to the Capitol!" 25,000 bags and wrappers were stamped in this manner.

You can fit your own guest ticket to Cox's goldfish bowl stunt and if there's an airport handy any number of good publicity tie-ups can be made for a picture of this type.

Coast Merrygoround

Transfers, resignations and abolishment of the city manager system continue unabated as the Brothers Skouras pursue their retrenchment drive on the West Coast.

Rasty Wright, Fox West Coast man at the Chinese Theatre, Hollywood, has resigned; Harry Woodin, formerly New York State division man and lately manager of the Bolevard Theatre, has severed his connection, and R. T. Bishop has withdrawn from management of the Alcazar Theatre at Bell.

Included among the new appointments are W. L. Doudlah, to the Fox Theatre, San Diego; Jack Stebbins, to the California, San Diego; J. L. Esperance, Orpheum, San Diego; John Howard, replacing Herb Norris at El Centro; Reno Wilkie to the California at Bakersfield; Ralph Blank from Figueroa to the Mesa; Larry Goux, from the Mesa to the Florence at Compton; Notis Komnymos to the Figueroa; Frank Newman to the U. A. at Long Beach; Marty Schwartz to the Boulevard; Charlie Jones to Westwood Village; Frank Brown replacing Bishop at the Alcazar, Bell; Lester Clark, to the U. A. at Pasadena; Horton Kahn, replacing Clark at the Colorado, Pasadena.

De luxe house in Los Angeles will be handled by Frank Newman. The Brothers Skouras, accompanied by Al Stetson, are on a northern trip at this writing.

MILT SCHOSBERG IS GETTING ACQUAINTED IN GLENS FALLS, N. Y.

Although in Glens Falls, N. Y., only a short time as manager of the new Paramount Theatre, Milt Schosberg has been active in the promotion of several stunts, among which was a tie-up with the local Boy Scout troop.

He contacted the Chief Executive of the Boy Scouts and arranged to have a selection of boys from the various troops put an exhibition on the stage for three nights during National Boy Scout Week.

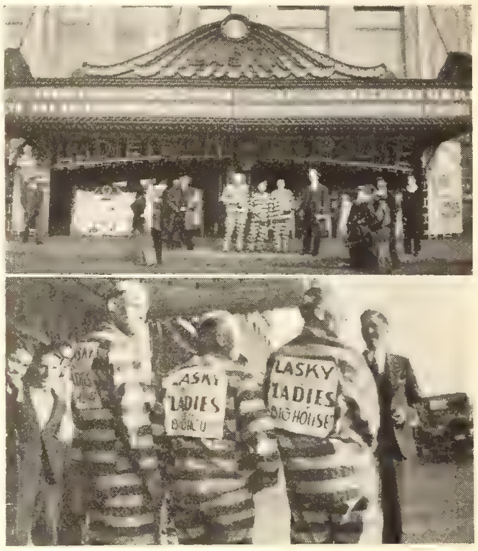
The stunt netted the theatre about one hundred inches of space in the papers, a radio broadcast each night, speeches at the Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs and 2,000 letters sent out to each Scout from Scout Headquarters.

Schosberg's deal not only proved a means of boosting the box office but acted as an excellent good will stunt. We're glad to hear he is getting along so nicely up-state.

MAC KRIM IN CHARGE OF LASKY, DETROIT; PUT OVER PRISON GAG

Since taking over management of the Lasky Theatre, Detroit, Mich., Mac Krim has put over a number of ballyhoo stunts, among which was a novel one on "Ladies of the Big House."

The illustration will practically tell the story of how he engaged the services of three hard-boiled looking "foreigners," dressed them in regulation prison uniforms, hair-shave and everything, and then had them parade through neighborhood streets with signs on their backs. Excellent publicity was also obtained through arrangements made with local police to have a patrol wagon drive up and arrest the three "prisoners." Usherettes also wore costumes similar to the one worn by Sylvia Sidney in the picture. A shadow box, with actual bars and cutouts of the characters, was also used in the inner lobby.



The above is Mac Krim's first contribution to this department and we can judge from this sample that he goes about show-business in an aggressive fashion. Those three "prisoners" certainly must have caused a sensation in the neighborhood and their shaved heads are a commentary on these tough times. Remember us to your brother Sol, Mac, and tell him not to forget that he, too, is a Round Tabler.

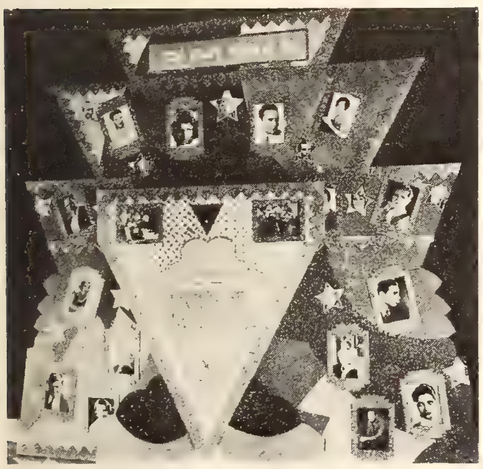
MEET MANAGER LYKES, WHO KNOWS A THING OR TWO ABOUT SHOWS

Meet J. E. Lykes, manager of Loew's Park Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, and the man who turns out those neat mimeographed programs, etc., that we've described from time to time in this department. That's his photo, right alongside.

He's still using that mimeograph to good effect, according to some cards we have at hand, and on the back of one we note that he made a tie-up with a local photographer for the giveaway of one free portrait when the four punch marks for as many weeks as had been punched. A time limit was set and the deal was restricted to lady patrons.

Another throw-away calls attention to an Owl Show, Saturday, 11.30 P. M. These were formerly advertised as Midnite Shows, but as the show really starts before midnight the new name has been found more suitable.

Lykes has also been having considerable success with a "Name the Stars" gag, which was good for over 1,000 replies and creation of a lot of interest among patrons. A small snapshot at hand, too faint for reproduction, shows an easel display of stills back of star-shaped cutouts in a large frame. Copy asked, "Who Are These Stars?" and stated that awards would be made for correct answers.



We are mighty glad to get a line on Lykes' work again for the reason that he is always turning out something interesting. The other small photo on this page shows a sample of the displays he is using in the Park lobby.

"High Pressure" Bonds

When exploiting "High Pressure" the Warner Strand Theatre, New York City, issued a circular made up in the form of a bond. It represented $10,000 worth of stock in "High Pressure, Inc." and copy read: "This Bond Is Good for 5,000 Laughs, 5,000 Thrills, When You See William Powell As a High Powered Salesman of Stocks and Blondes in 'High Pressure,' Now Playing at the Strand." Twenty attractive show girls distributed 25,000 of the "bonds" along Broadway on opening day.

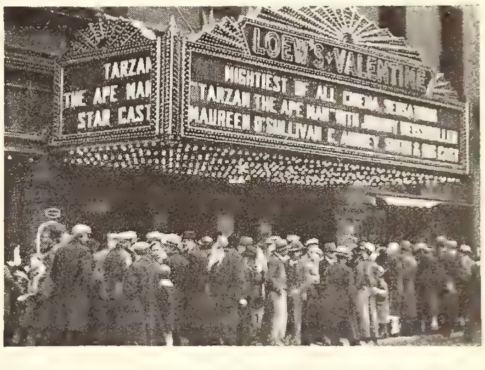
WALLY CALDWELL PUT OVER GOOD CAMPAIGN ON "TARZAN" PICTURE

Novel displays, newspaper and merchant tie-ups and a variety of special advertising were among the highlights of the campaign waged on "Tarzan, the Ape Man" by Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's, Toledo, Ohio.

Exploitation included B.V.D. bathing suit and Tarzan book windows in a large local department store; a special Tarzan book window in another department store; a special "Movie Mirror" window with one sheet and stills in McCrory five and ten in heart of city; 250 Tarzan cutout window cards in various downtown store entrances; 300 one-sheets in merchants' windows in all sections of city; one-sheet cards in largest downtown transient garage; 16 special downtown window locations for display of 10 by 12 Tarzan stills mounted on 14 by 18 backs; special three-sheet boards in important neighborhood locations (gratis); distribution of 15,000 Loew's News Tarzan Tabs by newsboys to residences, and the stuffing of 1,000 Loew's News Tabs in packages at a retail market on opening day.

The newspaper campaign included a classified ad tie-up which secured over 100 inches of display advance advertising; a three-day Tarzan strip coloring contest; special advance mid-week stories and cuts, and a 10-day advance and current advertising campaign in all newspapers. Many gratis stories were obtained in a number of local papers and in 18 rurals within 50 miles.



As usual in campaigns put over by Caldwell, a great deal of ground was covered with local tie-ups and newspapers. Wally's outfit has a campaign on for best work done on "Tarzan" and his name is hereby entered for whatever honors may be awarded him on "judgment day."

LONG SHOTS TAKEN BY NAIFY ON ANNIVERSARY PROVED TO BE WINNERS

The element of chance was marked from start to finish in the Seventh Anniversary Campaign made by S. Naify, manager of the T. & D. Theatres in Petaluma, Calif., but his long shots came home as winners, turning up at the same time some interesting angles of showmanship.

A Full-Week Affair!

In the first place, it was decided to hold the event for a full week instead of the conventional Anniversary Day or Days, generally spotted on a Friday or Saturday. Next, is was planned to take a long shot on "Way Back Home" for a three-days' booking, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, despite the fact that this picture was not going any too well in many towns. However, by applying the psychology that a picture booked for three days MUST be good, it went over well and turned out to most suitable fare for Pataluma movie patrons. Several thousand heralds describing the week's attractions, were distributed house-to-house. For Wednesday and Thursday he used another picture that had been in doubt for same time, namely the "Mad Genius," but by advertising it as an Anniversary Special it also went over in good shape; in fact, the patrons liked it after sitting through the showing.

The week was ended with "Rainbow Trail," the USC Vs Notre Dame Football Game, Laurel and Hardy in "Come Clean" and the concluding chapter of "Adventures in Africa," the latter having a big local following. In between the evening shows, the Mayor gave a talk that went over great. A huge cake, 15 feet in circumference, and decorated with 7-foot candles, graced the center of the stage.

Great Campaigning!

The Anniversary was also plugged when the bi-monthly calendar was mailed out by printing in a two-for-one guest ticket as an anniversary gift to patrons. The theatre also received a nice writeup from a reporter who happened to attend the late Saturday show prior to opening. Marquee banners and huge flags and several clever lobby displays contributed to the success of the event.

While on the subject of Naify's activities, let us tell you that he recently was privileged to show "Cougar," an animal picture made by Sidney A. Snow which will soon be released for national distribution. In connection with this showing he used a live mountain lion in cage on back of an auto for a bally and had small heralds printed for hand-out. The schools cooperated by closing early in the afternoon and matinees were started one-half hour late. At night the lion was parked alongside curb with the 1,000 watt spots lighting up entire front. Packed houses for every show resulted.

Getting back to Naify's Anniversary Week, it will have to be admitted that he did considerable gambling and got away with it very nicely, which all goes to show the power of well arranged advance publicity. Perhaps his tip in this respect will lead other members of our Club to treat the Anniversary stunt as something more than just another day to come and go. At any rate we thank him for his contribution and will look forward to additional news of his activities.

Dick Betts, novelty solo organist, is one of those enterprising musicians who has managed to get along despite the fact that sound played havoc with the jobs of theatre organists. He routes himself from house to house and the above ad will give you an idea of the kind of a salesman he is. Note that he divided space in a 9 x 11 ad with the feature picture. Incidentally, he carries a complete amplifying system along with him for personal broadcasting while at the console.

NOVEL BALLYHOO AND STAGE SHOW HELPED COHEN SELL PICTURE

Ballyhoos and a stage stunt were among the highlights in the campaign put over on "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde" by M. D. Cohn, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Colorado Springs, Colo.

An electrical robot man was built; this robot was made to look like Mr. Hyde, and talked and walked. On this, ballyhoo speeches were recorded and used both for advance and current plugs.

A promoted auto was used as a mystery car ballyhoo on the streets with the windows veiled and copy painted on in reference to the picture. The veiled curtain carried out the idea that the car was being driven without a driver while in reality, the curtains were of such material that it was possible to look out but to the persons on the outside, they couldn't see in.

During the run of the trailer previous week before opening, an usher did a "horror" portrayal during the frames; asking that juvenile attention be diverted from the screen. This man worked in a horror make-up with a green spot following him.

During the peak hours on the first two days of run, a nurse in uniform was on the main floor with a First Aid Kit on a table.

Cohn certainly played up the "unusual" when exploiting this picture and we think you'll all agree that he used the right slant. He employed several excellent stunts and it's to be hoped that his fellow showmen will be able to use his suggestions.

OTTO MEISTER PRESENTS 'EM INSIDE AND OUT!

Otto Meister, manager of the Whitehouse Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., has been playing Westerns for the past 12 years and the above photo will further serve to bear out our previous contention that without Otto the accessory department of the local exchange would be hard put. Otto not only showed "Mark of the Spur" on the screen, but gave outsiders their ten cents worth of action posters, stills and cutouts, to say nothing of a dummy dressed in cowboy costume. It's a Lulu, isn't it? We'll leave it to you! Despite zero weather, Otto states, "We did all the business on the street." Okay, Otto.

ED HART SOLD TROY NEWSPAPER IDEA FOR CLASSIFIED SECTION

When Ed Hart, formerly manager of the Strand Theatre, Utica, N. Y., was sent to Troy, N. Y., to act as city manager, one of the first things he did was to renew acquaintances among newspapermen. Incidentally, he paid a call on the classified ad manager and sold him the idea of using a trade booster for both department and theatre.

In a two-column box on the classified page headed "You Are Invited," readers were directed to read the ads and see for themselves the many worth while opportunities presented. They were further invited to see a show at Warner's Troy without cost by starting a new ad the following day. Passes could be obtained at the newspaper office. The newspaper box gave the theatre a generous break on copy relating to current show.

Hart used this same ad gag when in Utica and also obtained excellent results. He's passing it along to the rest of the gang to use as a variation of the usual run of classified material, such as swap ads, letters and names among ads, etc.

TATE PROMOTED TWO COSTLESS ADS WITH LOCAL RADIO DEALER

Two quarter page ads resulted from a cooperative deal recently made with a local dealer by A. R. Tate, manager of the Victoria Theatre, Jersey Shore, Pa.

One of the quarter-page ads advertised the picture playing the first part of the week, and the other ad was for the picture playing the latter part of the week. Small space at the bottom of these ads gave the radio dealer a bit of publicity.

In return for the radio dealer paying for both these quarter-page ads which incidentally were written and laid out by Manager Tate, permission was granted for the displaying of a radio in the lobby of the theatre during run of the two pictures.

Just another example of what can be accomplished when the spirit of cooperation is fully understood by theatre man and local dealer. In nine cases out of ten shaping of ads is generally left to the theatre man and it's his own fault if he doesn't get at least fifty per cent of the space.

Parents and teachers are urged to lend their support to the children in promoting the success of this event.

All goods received in this manner will be turned over to the Welfare Association for distribution to the needy of East Liverpool.

DON'T FORGET THE DATE ! !

SATURDAY MORNING

10 O'Clock—Doors Open 9:30 A. M

AT THE STATE

Just as a reminder that many of our members are helping out in community relief campaigns by holding "Canned Goods Matinees," we're reproducing an ad recently run by E. E. Bair, manager of the State Theatre, East Liverpool, Ohio, when he announced his move to help the needy families in his town.

Note that the message is addressed to the youngster element and that the party is going to be their party, including cartoons, comedies, novelties and everything in motion pictures calculated to keep a kid amused. They were requested to bring along one or as many cans of sealed fruit or vegetables as they cared to in lieu of admission. Parents and teachers were also urged to lend their support to the children for successful promotion of the event.

When making distribution of the articles of food, it is the usual custom to tie up with some trucking company for gratis transfer of the articles from the theatre to welfare associations, etc.

EDMUNDSON HAS LOW COST METHOD TO USE ON PROGRAM MAILERS

A combination program and mailing card is being effectively used by Bernard Edmundson, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Asbury Park, N. J., and the accompanying illustration will show you how he packs a whole week's list of attractions on the back of the card without jamming up a lot of copy.

Each week he makes a trip to the Post Office and buys enough regular penny post cards to take care of his mailing list. These are then addressed by typewriter, pen and ink or whatever means is at hand and taken to his printer for inscription of current copy. When the run of post cards is finished the printer runs off a quantity of cards the same size for use at the theatre, etc.

Edmundson appears to have hit upon a most economical means of taking care of programs and mailing list and he wants to pass it along to his fellow Club members. The card is made up so that a patron may tell at a glance what attractions are at the Rialto for the week.

GOOD CAMPAIGN MADE BY JEROME ZIGMOND ON "HELL" PICTURE

Patterning his campaign on "Safe In Hell," after the one used in New York City and adding several effective stunts of his own, Jerome Zigmond, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Denver, Colo., rang up satisfactory business on that picture.

Included among his efforts were attractive cutouts of Dorothy Mackail, posed with cigarette, for front display; prominent display of the line, "Not Recommended for Children"; planting of feature stores in local newspapers; distribution of 15,000 throwaways in office buildings and department stores; distribution of 3,000 special inserts in laundry packages; playing of 500 half-sheets in choice locations; a tie-up with a radio station for broadcasting of record from seventh reel; use of Publix Sound Train each day during run of picture; distribution of imprinted napkins and menus among 20 well known restaurants; 8x10 photos in jewelry store tie-up; 50 other photos in prominent windows; announcements over radio every night during run and three days in advance; stories in 20 out-of-town newspapers, and other stories in local papers.

It doesn't look as though Zigmond left very much out when handling the above campaign and there can be no doubt that the box office underwent a favorable reaction. Many of his selling angles can also be applied to a variety of pictures.

The accompanying illustration shows an example of the kind of cooperative advertising promoted by Thor Hauschild, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Steubenville, Ohio, and represents many inches of free space for theatre and current attraction. As mentioned in previous articles, Hauschild appears adept in the art of lining up local merchants for this type of ad. We think you'll all agree that the theatre received a generous break on space for its copy.

KENNEDY'S FASHION SHOW!

Standing Room Only Featured This Co-Operative Show With Plenty of Free Advertisement for Theatre!

A SPRING Fashion Show possessing unusual angles made possible by a three-cornered tie-up was recently engineered by Richard Kennedy, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Montgomery, Ala. Presented twice daily over a two-day period, the show was a highly successful enterprise for the box office, a newspaper and a charitable organization.

Theatre and Newspaper!

Kennedy and the city's leading newspaper were the prime movers behind the show and real genius was displayed when, in addition to enlisting the support of many of the foremost merchants, the Red Cross was tied-in for a share of the receipts. This move paved the way to obtaining the services of 10 of the season's debutantes to represent various merchants during the fashion displays. This meant that Society had endorsed the move, and Society means something more than just a word down in Montgomery.
